MAGGIE RAY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.
BY MRS. M. A. D. CLIFTON
Author of "Right and Wrong."

Who is dead? If angels ever died,
An angel, I surely should say;
But as they do not, you'll best know who
By the name she wore—Maggie Ray.
Who was she? Only a belle girl—
That at least was her station here;
But no truer heart or purer soul
E'er passed to the upper sphere.

Pure and true? You are wondering, sir,
If such words can truly be said.
Ah, sir! those who are higher in life
Might learn much of this lowly maid,
For station and wealth are given, sir,
To assist us in doing good,
And though small her means she gladly did
For humanity all she could.

And that I take it will be the test
When the settling day shall have come;
And Maggie's record we'll wish was our's,
When we hear the good she has done.
Hearts aching with grief she'd cheer with love,
Souls wand'ring in sin she'd reclaim;
Ah! sir! the pro'esion makes no one bad,
But the bad taint all with their name.

You watch the ballet, they sway and swing
As though the music breathed from them;
With an artist's eye you mark their poise
As grace itself; yet you condemn.
But I tell you there are souls as pure
That time the music's rise and fall,
As e'er passed life in cloister cells
To win the heaven that's free to all.

CONGO, THE CONJURER.

A STORY OF SHOW LIFE.

CHAPTER LVI.
THE BARONET AND HIS FRIENDS.

On answering to the knock at the door, referred to in the previous chapter, a domestic entered, and announced that Messrs. Rowcroft and Rickson were in the library, waiting to see Sir Charles on important business. He turned pale a moment—perhaps because his plans were so baiefully interrupted, and then hastened to say that he would be down in a minute. He saw carefully to his toilet, primed himself rather extensively with brandy, and then went slowly and thoughtfully down stairs. He entered the library, however, rather hurriedly, to start back in the middle of his first sentence, fierce and haughty.

"This must be sudden business," he began. "Squire Benton, this is rather unexpected. I thought we were not on visiting terms."

"Sir, I come here to aid in doing justice to my sister and her son. These gentlemen will explain."

Sir Charles turned sternly and haughtily to his solicitors.

"You come, I presume, then, on some special business?" he said.

"Hem—ahem!" said Mr. Rowcroft—"on special business. Without entering into particulars, we have come to the conclusion—ahem!—that the gentleman who called upon us the other day was really Sir Arthur Everton; and, under the circumstances, have resolved to act upon a clause in the will which has been hitherto overlooked."

"How so?"

"It was read at the funeral, Mr. Everton," went on Mr. Rowcroft; but it was, probably, not noticed by yourself."

"One more word, sir!"

"In case the widow of the late baronet married, and her son was to reach the age of eighteen, he was to come into instant possession, myself, partner, and Squire Benton, here, being trustees."

"Such insolent interference!" began the pseudo-baronet, moving towards the bell.

"One moment, sir. Here is an order from the Court of Chancery, giving us possession under this clause; and here is another order from the head coroner of England, the Lord Chancellor, to hold an open inquest on the body of the late Lady Everton," said Mr. Rowcroft, with a strange look.

"Whose son, Charles Everton, are suspected of having poisoned," urged Squire Benton, shaking his fist in the other's face.

"Pshaw!" cried Charles Everton; your client knows better than that,"—addressing the lawyers—"for wherever he is, there is his mother. When she went mad I preferred to make out she was dead."

Ere he had finished the sentence Charles sank in his chair before the fierce, indignant glance of his wife's brother.

"Heavens! what foul infamy!" he cried. All this must be inquired into. Mr. Charles Everton, until we have decided what to do, you must remain a prisoner in this house!"

"I am at your orders, though what you have to urge against me I know not."

"The stern squire turned to the lawyers and spoke in a whisper.

"Then a slight detention in your room until we make inquiries," added the squire, "can do no harm."

He then went to the door and introduced—not as the other suspected, a policeman, a detective-officer, but a stout serving man. Without a single word Mr. Benton preceded the pseudo baronet to his own room, which was on the second story. He bowed him in with cold politeness, and bidding his man on no condition to desert his post, locked the door, and took the key. Charles Everton was maddened to a pitch of fury impossible to describe. On the very pinnacle of success he had failed. Even now, were these two but dead, he could defy all the rest. The false funeral could, were he the master of the house, surely be hushed up. But in the hour of his family. But what was happening? This was what he had to consider. He opened a cabinet and took out a bottle of brandy; as he did so, his eyes fell upon a brace of pistols, which he at once concealed about his person. At all events, to this extent he was master of the situation. Arthur might be the owner of Everton Hall, might enter triumphant, but he never would be exposed to the scorn of the many-headed monster. In this supreme moment of agony and despair there was but one feeling above all others burning within his breast—hate undying for Congo the Conjurer. While these and other thoughts were passing through his mind, he saw that night was coming on. He had water and plenty of spirits in the room, and with these he proceeded to prime himself. But the ardent spirits only added to his feverish excitement. To cool his heated brow he went to the window and looked down upon the park, now all his, with every tree and acre he could see, but which might be wrested from him in a moment. He leaned out, with a cigar in his mouth, to think. Under a tree, at no great distance, he made out a man standing and looking up at the windows. It was the Patterer.

"Are you alone?" he said, in a low, clear, and distinct voice.

"I am. Can I speak to you? important—most important business."

"You will find a ladder in the garden yonder; it may enable you to come up."

Though the Patterer thought this an odd way of entering a gentleman's house, especially the mansion of a baronet and man of fortune, he hurried away, and soon returned with the ladder indicated on his shoulder. It was placed against the house, and soon the Patterer had clambered into the bed-room.

"Well," said the pseudo-baronet, who was pale and haggard, "what is the news?"

"It's all over, and I, for one, must be off!"

"What's over?"

"Pharaoh is dead; Namish and the lawyer are taken."

"Then why come here?" gasped the master of Everton.

"Because they you wot of are dead, too. Tney were put in the Smuggiers' Hole last night, and before this morning not a beam or stone of the farm-house stood together. It is burned to the ground, and they in it."

He stood a moment, gaping as it were at vacancy, and then sat down, pointing to his ever receding brandy-bottle. The Patterer handed him the bottle and glass; and, when he had helped himself, took it from him and did the same. Then he explained all, as far as he knew, and wound up by demanding the reward, including all that had been promised to the others. Everton gloomily acquiesced; and was about to rise and hand him his blood-money, when some one came to the door.

"Hide!" whispered Charles Everton, pointing to the bed.

The Patterer complied, and when the door opened Mr. Benton and Monk entered, accompanied by the detective.

"If you please, sir," said the latter, you are wanted below."

The supposed master of the house made no resistance. The presence of that man, his enemy from early boyhood, the one who held him, as it were, in a net, too persevering defender of the claimant to the estate, alarmed him more than anything else. But resistance was useless. There was something, too, so solemn in the manner of his wife's brother, which seemed to crush him under the influence of some terrible catastrophe. They led him to the library, where he found Messrs. Rowcroft and Rickson awaiting him. All looked grave and solemn, and seemed to hesitate how to begin. Mr. Benton was generally appealed to by the glances of the others.

"Everton," he said, sternly, "you and I have never been friends. I always knew you to be a snuffling, cunning, ambitious man, but I know you are not utterly lost to all sense of shame and honor——"

"In my own house——"

"You had better hear me out. When my weak and erring sister married you I trust her—left her to her own devices. Circumstances have proved that I was wrong. As a man, I should have stood by her, have supported her in her great trial and torture, and, above all, have defended the rights of the orphan, Sir Arthur; but my pride was too great, and the consequences have been dreadful."

"Really, Squire Benton, I am neither answerable for the death of my wife, nor her son," said the other, as lightly as he could.

"They are not dead; but it is no fault of yours they lie not in the grave! My sister you drove to the verge of madness, employed unscrupulous nurses and doctors to declare dead, and then immured in a living tomb! My nephew you hurled from home, drove him to seek refuge with tumblers and showmen, and, finally, sent in forced exile to America! What you have done within the last few days we need not recapitulate. One of your accomplices has told all."

He shivered, turned deadly white, but showed no signs of yielding. He would at all events know the worst before he gave in.

"I ask you solemnly, Charles Everton, to confess, to ask pardon, to do your utmost to make up for all the evil you have done, ere it be too late. I implore you to have pity on yourself!"

"I am sick of these heroics!" cried the guilty man, fiercely. "Do your worst!"

The detective advanced and seized him by the arm, while Monk clutched him by the other.

"On your own head be it!" said Monk, or, rather, Edward Everton, as we now must call him. "This way. Come, and behold your handiwork!"

He gazed at them with a wild, anxious glance, but he would not yield one jot.

CHAPTER LVII.
FIAT JUSTICIA.

He was led to the door which opened into the music-room, one of the finest in the house, and it was cast open. The sight which met his eyes, to him, was appalling in the extreme, though, in itself, it was not so dreadful to look at.

All the ordinary guests had taken their departure, leaving only the prima donna behind, with her suite. There was evidently something odd going on which excited suspicions in the mind of most present. An atmosphere of mystery, of police, of detectives, animated the house, and respectable country families have a particular dislike to anything that savors of the interference of justice. But there were two guests, who, to Charles Everton, were as ghost y visions from the other side of the grave. His wife and his step-son. Pale, thin, exhausted, and looking more like corpses than anything else, they sat each in an arm-chair, one—the mother—supported by the wife of the ex-conjurer, the other, by the prima donna, shorn of all her splendor and grandeur—plain Nelly of the older time.

"Heavens!" he cried, gasping for breath, "Whence come they?"

"From the grave," said his wife, in a low, hollow tone, "to charge you with my murder. I am dying, man of guilt; and you are the assassin of myself and child."

"Take me away!" he gasped.

"Not yet," answered Arthur, rising from the pilows on which he had been leaning, after swallowing an invigorating draught from the hand of Nelly. We part not so easily. Do you own me at once, or without hesitation——"

"I do," was the faint reply.

"I pray, take you down his words in writing," said Squire Benton, who indicated the two lawyers seated near the fire-place behind a screen.

Anything—only take me away!" he gasped, writhing in agony.

"I have," observed the elder partner, in his usual hesitating way, "written down a solemn recognition of the rights of Sir Arthur here present. If Mr. Everton will be good enough to sign that, the matter is at an end."

"I am willing," said Arthur, who was now appealed to.

A short document, humiliating in the extreme to the ex-master of the house, and recording the many parts played by Arthur since his flight from home, and the most absolute recognition of his rights, was now read by the lawyer. Charles Everton sat, rushing to his head in such a way as to make everything look red, he took up the pen and signed. In an instant the paper was witnessed by Squire Benton, Edward Everton and the detective.

"And now," said Charles Everton, folding his arms, and looking them full in the face, "what more do you expect of me?"

"None of us are safe while you are in England," was the reply. "You must expatriate yourself forever," said the pitiless brother-in-law.

"And starve! I have nothing. I suppose my worthy old uncle has been poisoned against me?" he flippantly continued.

"He is dead, Cousin Charles," said the ex-conjurer, dryly, "and has left everything to my dear wife, Ellen, here, so that hope is gone. He knew the truth at last."

"Confound you, yes! You were the ever deadly thorn in my side! But starve I cannot!"

"Sir Arthur, now being in possession of his estates, not wishing to have the family name dragged in the mire, will allow you two hundred a year, so long as it is drawn in the name of Smith," said Squire Benton.

"Two hundred a year! You are generous, gentlemen," he sneered. "But I am in your hands. Command me. I suppose, as I am rather exhausted, I may claim the use of my room until morning?"

Arthur nodded, though the others made a face at the proposition. It was, however, agreed that he should be strictly confined to his chamber, and early in the morning was to leave for Liverpool under the charge of Septimus Flint and a trusty assistant. This settled, he turned to go, followed by the detective and the stalwart serving-man already alluded to. Charles Everton, ere he finally stepped across the threshold, once more eyed the group, and his face was long remembered for its wild look of unutterable anguish. None spoke and all breathed more freely when he was out of sight. It would be hard to paint the joy of that re-union. Immediately after the exit of the villainous author of so much agony and misery, the two doctors, who had been in attendance since the previous day on the victims, entered, and had them carried off to bed, as even the brief excitement of that scene had been too much for them. And so, after so many years, the mother and son slept under the same roof. But while that man was in the house good guard was kept over them by servants on whom they could rely. Except Charles Everton's wife, who disappeared with the house-keeper as soon as he heard of the presence of a detective in the house, all the servants were delighted. A repast worthy of the occasion was sent up to the gentlemen, Mrs. Edward Everton and her daughter officiating in the sick-room; and warm were the congratulations on all sides as to Arthur having come to his own again. The solicitors explained that from the first they had recognised him, but aware of the presence of Charles Everton, and of his cunning, they had instructed Mr. Septimus Flint privately. Mr. Benton, who sat at the head of the table, had just given a low three-times-three for Arthur, when the door opened abruptly and the butler entered, with a gaping countenance.

"Please, sir, he's gone!"

"Who is gone?"

"One moment," said the detective, quietly. "I suppose you have been up with the supper, as I directed?"

"Yes, sir, and Lamer with me; but the room is empty, drawers ransacked and—and there's a ladder at the window."

"He has been tracked by the Patterer," said the detective. "Well, gentlemen, I don't think you need trouble much. If by the day's end to-morrow they are not out of England, I will have them both in safe custody."

After a short conversation it was decided that perhaps it was better so; and the quiet of the evening was restored.

CHAPTER LVIII.
CHARLES EVERTON AND THE PATTERER.

When the ruined and fallen man regained his bed-room, it was under the influence of feelings which are scarcely to be defined. Rage, despair, fury at defeat, shame at his ruthless exposure, were mingled within his bosom. The fall was so tremendous; from a baronetcy, with unlimited resources, to John Smith, with a paltry two hundred in a foreign land. He had forgotten the Patterer; and when that worthy came forward, as soon as his jailers had placed a light on the table and departed, he met him with a scowl.

"Anything wrong?" he said.

"Ruined beyond hope!" he replied, with a fearful imprecation.

"I hope not," exclaimed the other, coarsely; "or else what am I to do?"

"Your paltry money is safe enough! But know, knave, cheat, that Sir Arthur Everton and my wife are both in this house, alive and well, and that your story of their death is a sham to cheat me!"

The Patterer, angry as he was at being thus expostulated with, was still too much amazed not to ask for an explanation. When he heard it he poured out the whole venom of his nature on the Barbican lawyer and Namish.

"I'll be even with them," he said, "if I live twenty years!"

"But how!" cried Charles Everton. "I should like to be revenged on a good many; but, as I am to be walked on board a New York steamer to-morrow morning, I do not see exactly how it is to be done."

"Then, sir, give me my money and let me go. I don't want to go on board no Liverpool steamers."

Charles Everton rose, and went to his private secretaire, which he opened, and took out, first, his pistols, and then four packets of money, the promised bribe which the four murderers were to have earned.

"You are alone here," said Charles Everton, "and though you have not earned your money, take it all."

And he pushed over the four rouleaux to the man, who, when he broke them open one after another, could scarcely believe his eyes.

Meanwhile Charles Everton had secured diamonds, notes and gold to a large amount, after which, he turned to a wardrobe, supplied himself with a heavy top-coat and slouched hat.

"Lead the way," he said; "I will follow. Perhaps we may do a stroke of business yet," he added, with a wild and strangely sardonic laugh.

The Patterer looked on him with a strange smile; and then, seeing his employer fly to the brandy-bottle, imitated his example, after which the two descended from the window, hastily crossed the lawn, and fled from Everton Hall like criminals who had been prison-breaking. Charles Everton's wish was to reach London. He thought he could place himself in a secure hiding there; that he might yet make terms—at all events, obtain permission to remain in England, which, to men like him, was about the only field in which he could carry out his ideas. He left all the details to the Patterer, whom, as he went along, he contrived to enlist in his interests by wild and almost ridiculous propositions. They walked hard that night, doubled, followed winding lanes, took their way across country, and finally, towards morning, halted at a well known tramp hostelry known as the "Sun in the Sands," where such as they were always welcome for the money. Here they encountered to stop until the night came, when they could determine upon their future proceedings; but neither would retire to a bed-room, for neither placed any trust in the other. They remained beside the general kitchen fire snatching a hasty nap now and then, but never wholly sleeping. Towards evening, as if wearied of this by-place, they roused themselves, and having ordered a meal, continued their conversation. Any action against the foe who had crushed them out and put them upon them, was at present out of the question; but such men as Charles Everton, ever blinded by greed and lust for money and power, are not easily disheartened, and he tortured himself to think how he might retrieve his lost fortunes. He was still the heir to the baronetcy until Arthur married and had children. Could he not lie in wait, bide his time, and allow his memory to fade away until a change occurred, when, if Arthur or any accident disappeared, he might present himself once more as claimant. No one could prevent him. Her son dead, his wife even would have no motive in rejecting his advances; and in his low and degraded position he even chuckled now over the faint hope of once more punishing her for all the evil she had done him. Such is the blindness and sophistry of the human heart, that he ignored all his own evildoings, and even considered himself an injured party in him otherwise. The Patterer heard all with the utmost coolness. He had no notion of thrusting himself into any further danger. His head had been in a noose often enough, and it was his intention not to risk his valuable life and liberty any more. Still he humored his employer, and agreed that instead of going to America they should take up their quarters for a time at Boulogne-sur-Mer, which the other knew well, and whom they could rely. Except Charles Everton's wife, who disappeared with the house-keeper as soon as he heard of the presence of a detective in the house, all the servants were delighted. A repast worthy of the occasion was sent up to the gentlemen, Mrs. Edward Everton and her daughter officiating in the sick-room; and warm were the congratulations on all sides as to Arthur having come to his own again. him some little time, and kept his pistol cocked in his hand.

"Dog!—villain! You would have robbed me, would you?" he hissed forth, with savage energy.

But the man made no reply. Charles Everton approached him cautiously, thinking he was getting ready for some other trick. But no; there were no more plans for the Patterer to play on earth. He lay dead, a stark, staring corpse. The murderer, for even though it was partially in self-defence, so he was—having made sure of the fact, stooped, searched the body, and drew forth the leathern purse, into which he had thrust the gold which had cost him his life. He then hurried away, determined to put a long distance between himself and that part of the country before morning. About break of day, a farmer's cart, with two men who had bargained for a ride, came that way, and saw some one lying on the road.

The two men, who were no other than Namish and the lawyer, leaped out of the cart, and at once recognised their unhappy confederate. But except the interchange of a strange look, they made no sign. It was no part of their system to bring themselves within the hands of the law by volunteering information. They moved the body on one side, and, thanking the carter, who was gaping with open mouth at the scene, turned off into the first by-way they came to, and were speedily lost. The body was found, an inquest held, a reward offered, but nothing came of it. In a small village churchyard there is a nameless grave, in which lies the Patterer—a grave such as he never expected to fill. The two indefatigible sleuth-hounds were lost in London, and reappear no more in our narrative. How their quest succeeded, it is not for us to say. We only know that both were said to have come into a wealthy inheritance, and that Charles Everton never applied for his promised annuity. Sir Arthur, in the society of his mother, and other dear friends, soon recovered health and strength. But all felt a change to be necessary, and for this and other reasons he went abroad. Nelly withdrew from the stage; and when, a year later, she reappeared in society as Lady Arthur Everton, and was known to be the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Morton, few had any suspicion of her identity with the brilliant prima donna, while none knew of her wandering life, when she was the guardian angel, as it were, of the poor and friendless boy, now her proud and happy husband. The Gipsy girl remained faithful to her secret love, and married. She never deserted the old woods; and when children came, and their little feet pattered on the sward, there was a watchful and careful eye near them. She always lived in her tent, and kept her people within bounds. A strange big man for many years was keeper in the stables, until a weakness in his knee-joints compelled him to retire into private life. This was the faithful giant. Nothing is ever said openly, but in secret conclave all those who have been actors in our life-drama recall with a smile many of the incidents in connection with the life of CONGO THE CONJURER.

THE END.

A DOG STORY.

On Wednesday, the 7th of June, 1865, Mr. Otto Striedinger, a gentleman connected with the Royal Victoria Hospital at Netley, Eng., went with two friends to a croquet party at Westend, about five miles from Netley. He was accompanied, as usual, by his favorite dog, Worry, a magnificent black retriever. The weather being extremely hot, the croquet did not begin before four o'clock, and was followed by supper, so that it was ten o'clock before the party broke up. The three gentlemen then walked back to Netley in the dark. The footpath by which they returned led through a private park, and across a common overgrown with heather. When about a mile from Netley, the walkers passed a reservoir which supplies the hospital with water. The night being hot and close, Mr. Striedinger wished to give his dog a swim. He whistled again and again, but no Worry came; so he made up his mind that the dog had been hunting for his own private amusement, and had lost the track, as there was very little scent on the ground. Worry's master did not trouble himself about his whereabouts, as he had been for years a very independent dog, quite up to taking care of himself, and would doubtless find his way home later.

Mr. Striedinger arrived at the hospital and was preparing to go to bed, when he remembered that he had to answer two letters, which he had received by that afternoon's post, just as he was starting with his friends for Westend. These letters were of great importance, and, when Mr. Striedinger had looked for them without success, he felt extremely uncomfortable. He instituted a search all over his rooms, turned his writing case topsy-turvy, looked through his desk, but all in vain. He then took a light and had a hunt in every nook and corner of his office, but came back empty handed.

Thoroughly tired and discomposed, he went to bed. Unable to sleep, he got up in the middle of the night to make another and an equally fruitless search. At last the morning sun began to light up the rooms, which was a signal for fresh investigation, with the same result. Then and not before, the idea struck him that the letters having been delivered just as he was starting for the croquet party, he must have read them on the way thither, and must have put them into his coat pocket; but when he thrust his hand into the pocket and drew it back empty, he felt convinced that his letters were lost beyond all chance of recovery. Hoping against hope, however, he resolved to make one more effort.

He rushed off, unshaven and unwashed, to retrace his steps of the previous day, looking right and left, turning over every scrap of paper he saw lying on the road, stopping wherever he recollected that he and his companions had stopped the day before, mistaking every object that was conspicuously light in the distance for the papers, and growing more despairing every minute.

After walking on for about three miles, he espied a black object lying close to the footpath. It was Worry's black head. Approaching himself for having, in his great uneasiness, forgotten his fave fie, he whistled to Worry, who, however, instead of showing his usual alacrity, remained lying motionless on the ground. His owner supposed him to be caught in one of the snares with which he knew the common to be thickly studded; but, on his approaching Worry, up jumped the dog, leaving exposed to Mr. Striedinger's delighted view the missing letters, together with a number of loose papers.

There had been a very heavy dew that night, and Worry's curly coat was as wet as if he had had an hour's swim in the neighboring reservoir; but the papers were as dry, hot and crisp as a breakfast roll out of a baker's oven. There were marks of teeth on one or two of them, showing, either that before having had recourse to his subsequent and successful expedient for preserving his master's property, Worry had endeavored to collect and carry the scattered manuscripts; or, which is more probable, he had—finding them too numerous to allow of his acting on his retrieving instincts—brought all the outlaying letters within reach of the shelter of his outstretched body.

It was now eight o'clock. This devoted dog had been on guard over these papers for sixteen hours, ever since the friends went to Westend, about four o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. It must have been then, and not on the return to Netley, that Mr. Striedinger dropped his letters, for they fell out of a breast-pocket of the coat, which he hung over his arm when walking in the sultry heat of the afternoon, but which he wore on his way home at night, when it would be impossible for the contents of the pocket so to escape. The gentlemen in returning must have made some slight deviation from the path by which they had gone, and in this manner must have missed the sentinel, Worry.

UNCLE SCHNEIDER'S SKETCHES.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY MARK QUENCHER.

DER PIRATES—A SEA SHDORIES.

Dis vas a shdory of der vet und dampy sea, der poundless oceans vich rolls und rolls—und don'd got tired of rolling. Der principal scenes of dis much oxciding shdory dook place on der roaring und sassy Adiandic oceans, vich rolls, und kigs, und shlashes mit much successfulness.

Vell, vonce upon von day, our goot shib, "der Scooding Porgie," vas brommenading along der sea, near der longitudes, und nod very far from der latidudes, und vas gidding boosded ahead of a shtrong adarboard preeze, und all sails nailed oud, und——vell, she vent along first-rade, apout a few knots a hour, vhen suddenly all ad vonce her bassengers, vich I vas von of dem, saw—apout dwendy plocks avay—a "shdrange sails," mit a shib, dot——of course!

Ad first ve didn't care bout dot; but vhen somepoddy porrowed a grammar-pook, und valked indo dot, und found oud dot ve vas ad dot bresend time righd in der neighborhoodts of der awful "pirate fellers," und vas choosd righd giose abart of der corner vhere dot crowd hanged ond (so to sbeak so), ve vas soon git der baibitations py our hearts inside of, und our knee-shin-bones vas come all shivers!

As der adrange shib drived ub nearer py us, ve cood blainly saw sdicked on der top of der "mizzen-mainmasts" der awful sign of der pirates—der plack flags vat vas plack! Dot plack flags vas been der "coats-of-arms" of der chendlemans vat vas pirates by profession.

I vill dold you how dot vas builded, und how dot looked. Id vas of a very successful plack colors, und in der middle-side of dot dhere vas bainted a goot unbleasand vood-cut, or rag-cut, of vat dhey call "Death's Pybrehendt und Grossed Bones!

Oh, py der chiminy gootness, dot vas a awful bainting. Dot vas a headt made ond of bones, mid der shkins all veared off, und der plood dried oud, vich shmiles a mosd un-chovial shmiles, und under pelow dot vas a cubble of bones of der legs, vat vas veared ond choosd der same like der headts, und vich looked choosd so vorse pesides, neider!

Vell, so soon vat ve put our eyes on dot schveet flags our hearts vas py our throats inside of, und ve oxclaimed mit much earnestness, "Oh, py chinks!"

On der back-handed masts dhere vas anoder flag, on "Pyvore gu some quarter, look out!"

Vhen ve readed und dot ve vas der most sugcessful crowds of "wite fedders" vat you nefer don'd saw most always. Vhen der pirate shib comed apout a block near avay of us you cood seen all der bassengers of our shibs mid bencils und babers, making oud dnere vills oud. Dose vat didn'd vas hafe some "really estates" und such dings to make out vills mit choosd keebed on trembling dhere legs. After a leedle vile ve readed py der veak light of der gas dot der name of der pirate shib vas called "Der Leedle Defils!"

Dot vas a shveet shmelling names, don'd id? Vell, in der meantimes, der conductors und drifers of our neple ship vas making oud brebarations for der fight. Benknifes vas sharbened, und all der Limpurger cheeses vas bringed ub to make dhem fellers dhere shdomacks sick of dhemselfs vhen dhey got a noses full of dot!

Bood soon der conductors of der "Leedle Defils" says dose trumpets (vich had der moosic part all out ond), "Hullo! you fellers! Shdop a leedle on cound ve vill board you!"

Our conductors hollered pack dot ve didn'd vant some boarders. Und dhen der pirate shbeaked dot ve bedder dry our mouds ub or he makes us a ball py his cannon's qvick ond, und no sooner he says dot as a shmoke vas seen und a qvide big sized ball, vat vas made ond of real iron, comes in mit a visde. Vell, py dunder, didn'd ve shumb bully choosd dhen, und ve all singed mit much emotions "Blease put us our leedle beds inside of."

Vell, in bond a short leedle vhile—or berhabs not so long—ader dwo of der shibs bunked togedder, und dhen vas beginned a much very indereshding dimes.

Der "Scooding Porgies" vas ketched py der necks of dheir heels py der "Leedle Defils," und—vell, der "Leedle Defils" gaddling dhey shlashed in der vater dred rade!

Here vas a man mit his headt shooded off his leets, shbeaking dot he musd git some "qvarter;" und dhere vas anoder feller mit all of his legs drobbed loose around, vat didn'd mind der righd ad all, und didn'd dook some interests in der leedle difficulty—on der cound he vas gone diedt ad der dred round. By und by, dhere didn'd vas not a single feller of der "Scooding Porgie" left mit a whole bones to his names—exebt me.

I vas der onliest "Scooding Porgie" vat vas not yet prokened nb, and as I observed a handfull of "Leedle Defils" gallobing arounddt mit bisdols in dheir teeths, looking for some more "Porgies" to make targets ond of, und to insult mit dhem "knifes vat vas Bowie," I dinked of dot bieces of boudiry vich Minder Jake Shear made oud of his own headts—

"He vhos hgbds und runs away.

Vill live to fighd some oder day vhen der vas a bedder chances."

So I dinked id vood been goot boiicys to "made scarce of myself"—dot means to bromenade my ear off und valk ond so quicker vat I could. Vell, so I chumbed der sea in, und burning der rudder for my nadit city, I peginned a schvim of apout dwo hundred Minder Veston, der feller vat valks avay mit himself.

For der fradest cubble of miles I vent easy enuff, but after dot, about efery plocks I vas hafe to rub my arms mit prandy und sudch sdoffs, vitch, fordunately (very much fordunately, vat) I finded in my bandyioons bockets inside of.

By dis means I vas successfulness enuf to faint mit myself, und after floating round in dis vay for apout a good vhile I vas got bicked up by a passing shibs, vat der cabdain of dinked dhere vas someding der matter on der cound of der varyations of dot barometer, und so he keebed a look ond mit his eyes all skinned, und found ond dot dhere vas someding der matter—I vas der matter—und so I vas bicked ub more alife as deadt, dot's so!

Vell, after I vas git bedter of my leedle I recovered myself quite enuf to dell der horrible shdruck bassengers about der melongolly fates of der "Scooting Porgies," und about der awful exscentricities (you cood saw dot vordt midond shekdickles, ain'd id?) of der "Leedle Defils," und "least, but not last," to gif dhem a unanymous vote of dhanks on der cound of saving der healthyness of der last "Scooding Porgie." (Dis vas der ends).

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

EDWARD S. STOKES.

In the CLIPPER'S portrait gallery of this issue is given an excellent likeness of Edward S. Stokes, now being tried in this city for shooting the late Col. Jas. Fisk, Jr., on the evening of January 6th last, at the Grand Central Hotel, which resulted in the colonel's death, and the particulars of which the majority of our readers, no doubt, are already familiar with. Mr. Stokes was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1841, and is therefore about thirty-one years of age. In height he is five feet nine inches, has a prepossessing appearance, always dresses tastefully, is of a graceful but rather slight build, and in weight is about 140 lbs. About ten years since he married a lady of good family, by whom he has one child. For some time he has been a man of prominence among financiers, hence his alliance with Fisk in several business transactions, and by whom he was introduced to Miss Josie Mansfield, a very particular friend of Mr. Fisk's, and to whom he was ardently attached. Gradually, it seems, Josie evinced a partiality for Mr. Stokes, which aroused the spirit of jealousy, it is alleged, between the two men, and business misunderstandings ensued, resulting in suits at law on Stokes' part, also by Josie, against Fisk, at the Yorkville N. Y. Court, which resulted in the fatal shooting case above alluded to, and for which Stokes is now on trial, and the issue of which is now an absorbing topic of conversation with the general public.

WEAR AND REPAIR OF THE BRAIN.—The notion that those who work only with their brains need less food than those who labor with their hands, has been the cause of untold mischief. Students and literary men have often been the victims of a slow starvation, from their ignorance of the fact that mental labor causes greater waste of tissue than muscular. According to careful estimates, three hours of hard study wear out the body more than a whole day of work at the anvil or on the farm. "Without phosphorous, no thought," is a German saying, and the consumption of that essential ingredient of the brain increases in proportion to the amount of labor which the organ is required to perform. This wear and tear of the brain are easily measured by careful examination of the salts in the liquid excretions. The importance of the brain as a working organ is shown by the amount of blood it receives, which is proportionately greater than that of any other part of the body. One-fifth of the blood goes to the brain, though its average weight is only one-fortieth of the weight of the body. This fact alone would be sufficient to prove that brain-workers need more food and better than mechanics and farm laborers

FORMER HOURS REMEMBER.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY WM. J. O'REARDON.

Oh, remember former happy hours,
My dearest dear, my only love;
Oh, yes, remember Gorda's bowers
And Sandville's shady, pleasant groves;
There had we stray'd, the flowers among,
In peaceful days long flown away,
And harkened to the wood bird's song
And viewed the gay lambs sportive play.

Often I gaze with fancy's eye,
And view those charming scenes again;
Thy pleasant cot I can de-scry
Where roses bloom and sweet briers twine.
The lordly oak with arms widespread,
Clad in their garb of emerald green;
How oft its cool and placid shade
To us a sweet retreat has been.

There smiling flowers, all lovely, fair,
Of varied hues bedecked the ground,
Whose fragrance filled the healthful air,
And shed their sweet perfumes around.
What bliss was ours, Lucenda dear,
Dost thou forget, I never shall;
I often shed a kindly tear,
And feel what words can never tell,

BARNUM ON THE TENTED FIELD.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CHARLES H. DAY.

With every spring commences a vigorous campaign in the tented field. In this instance the invading army is on a mission of peace, and is heartily welcomed everywhere by the people, who pay tribute to the stranger without a murmur.

The march of a circus company through the land with its host, and the moving of baggage vans from town to town, is similar to the progress of an army. No conqueror ever entered a city half so welcome or greeted by so many smiling faces as the glittering pageant threads its way to the inspiring strains of martial music.

Adam Forepaugh made an innovation when he exhibited his "Aggregation" under two tents for one price of admission, where those who had been brought up in a straight-laced school could contemplate the wonders of the animal kingdom without contaminating themselves with the tights and spangles of the arena.

When P. T. Barnum and Manager Coup placed their Mastadon "on the road," the jovial Dan Castello and his circus were given the principal tent, a second being used for the menagerie, and a third for a museum of living and inanimate curiosities.

The success of the great showman's latest venture was without parallel. The seating capacity of the tents was again and again increased, and still found to be inadequate. Wherever they went the populace turned out en masse, and every train and by-road running into the cities added their contributions to the thousands. A greater portion of the season three performances were given daily, causing the fat woman and giant to lose flesh, and the living skeleton, if possible, to grow thinner than ever.

Phineas was ubiquitous, "here, there, and everywhere," now ahead of the company, giving gratuitous lectures on "How to Make Money," not forgeting to always say a good word for the "greatest show on earth," to which he would hasten back in time to publicly present some faithful employe with a gold badge, medal, or other valuable gift, as a token of his regard and esteem, an extra attraction that would cram the three canvases to overflowing; while "way down east" it is reported that a bit of sharp practice was put up on the great showman. It was route as the horses broke and purchase new stock on story goes, a party in Barnum's employ one morning groomed with extra care a pair of P. T.'s own noble blacks, drove them up to where Barnum and Coup were overseeing the erection

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ We never answer questions by mail. All addressed to us seeking information will be answered through this column only.

Ten Broeckers.—John Brougham, on Thursday evening, Nov. 15th, 1855, performed in the "Stage Struck Irishman" at the Old Bowery Theatre, N. Y., commencing at 7½ o'clock, and terminating at 10½ P. M. He, in company with 100 invited guests, then took stages for Jersey Ferry, and started from Jersey City for Philadelphia, Pa., at 7.35, arriving at the Kensington depot at 10 o'clock precisely. The party then took stages to the National Theatre, Walnut street, above Eighth, arriving there at 10.30. The performances at the National, consisting of a first class circus, and a dramatic company, commenced at 7½, and terminated at 10½ with the "Maniac Lover." During the evening telegraphic dispatches were read to the audience, stating how far the company had proceeded. John Brougham played Powhattan in his own burlesque of "Pocahontas," and the curtain rose for this performance at 10.30 and fell at o'clock. The invited guests who occupied seats in the circus ring, then, with the performers, took supper at the Girard House, after which they returned to New York by special train. You have lost your bet.

R. B., Can a ball be called that is struck at by the batsman?"……Yes, in one case it can. If the ball pitched is an unfair ball, that is, one out of the fair reach of the bat, the umpire must call it after it has passed the home plate, and in the act of calling it the batsman strikes, still it must be called, especially if made for the purpose of striking out, but if the ball is pitched within reach of the bat, though not low or high, as called for, in such case, if called and struck at, it is a fair ball, and the strike must be called instead of a ball, unless the batsman is willfully trying to strike out.

Ballist.—"A man being on the first base, the man at the bat strikes at a very high and long ball to the out-field, and then the man that was on first reaches second before the ball is caught. Is he entitled to that second base?"……Certainly not; he must return and touch the base he left, and may not leave it until the ball is caught or dropped.

Reader.—"Where a player is running from first to second base, or from second to third, and the ball is thrown into the hands of a baseman on the base, has the latter got to touch the runner if the ball before he can be called out, the ball getting there before the runner does?"……Yes; unless the base runner is "forced" off the base he left.

J. W. B., Monroe, La.—1. As the article a refers to a single person or thing, and as the picture represents more than one woman and one man, it is evident that both of you lost, consequently the bet is a stand off. 2. We don't know positively, but presume that he may be trusted. Send for a copy of the paper and read for yourself.

C. A. N.—The games won by Baltimore up to June 23d were Cleveland, 3; Troy, 1; Olympic, 2; National, 2; Mansfield, 2; Mutual, 1; Athletic, 1; Atlantic, 1. Total in favor of Baltimore were:—Boston, 4; Athletic, 2; Mutual, 3; Mansfield, 1; Cleveland, 1. Total, 10. This does not include the game forfeited to Mansfield.

Ajax, Baltimore, Md.—We fear you will meet with little encouragement in applying for the position of agent for dramatic troupes. Your experience is of some value, but actual experience in traveling through the country, knowledge of theatres, halls, and many other things to be learned only by travel and association, are absolutely required.

B. Wheeler, Faribault, Minn.—The best leaping over horses, that is recorded, was performed by Dawson's Valley, on August 24th, 1858, at Corinth, Miss., when he cleared seventeen horses. We are constantly in receipt of letters from performers claiming to have cleared twenty-two, but such performances lack the endorsement to put them on record.

Sam R., Davenport, Iowa.—J. H. Browne is not a correspondent of the Clipper. We have constantly cautioned managers to pay no attention to parties claiming to be our correspondents, unless they can produce the signed correspondent's card from the editor and proprietor. If showmen are imposed upon it is their fault.

J. H., East Birmingham, Pa.—Josh Ward's great five mile time, 25min. 12sec., was made in a regatta on the Staten Island course, 2½ miles down the Narrows and return, on the 11th of October, 1865. His opponents were Andy Fay, Tom Daw and John Manning. The former being first, the former only 15sec. Some time previous, Josh had pulled about 4½ miles in 23min. 45sec.

Doc, Savannah, Ga.—1. Mr. Daly will manage both the Fifth Avenue Theatre and the Grand Opera House, in this city, during the coming season. 2. We never answer questions concerning the domestic affairs of professional ladies. 3. Yes, the company is the same.

Perseverance.—Salina and Radelanden have the fastest one mile records; these record, both skating, made 1.40. Fastest two miles, Radelanden, 3.30. The record, as it was the fractional part of the race of 1½ miles.

J. C. W., N. Y.—1. Goldsmith Maid was bred by Mr. Decker, Orange county, N. Y.; she is 16 her 18th year. Lucy is about 13 years old, but we do not know who bred her. 2. Budd Doble. 3. Mr. Vanderbilt, Stewart and Rainslander.

Matt T.—1. Baron Rothschild did not win the 2,000 guineas race last year. It was won by Rothwell. 2. McGregor was neither first, second, nor third for the Derby. 3. Eclipse never ran one mile in a minute, nor did any other horse do it.

H. B., Vicksburg, Miss.—1. B, having but one point to go and holding his adversary's score game, has/ge the right to go and make the three points he gave, was not set back, consequently went out first with his high.

J. H. H.—A "fair foul" is a ball to close to the line of the base from home to third, or home to first, as to strike the ground fair but to rebound to the foul ball part of the field. These balls are generally hit close to the home plate.

Barry, Hornellsville, Pa.—Advertising the best facilities and inducements you can offer showmen to visit your town, naming explicitly the sharing terms or certainties you will give companies, we think, will prove the best plan.

Constant Lover.—1. The Atalantas were the challengers in their match with the London Rowing Club. 2. Both are wrong; in making a match the opposing parties mutually agree as to the place where the race shall be rowed.

H. O'D'S Subscriber, Washington, D. C.—1. A player takes fewer points than he is entitled to, he may not correct his error; but, on the other hand, his opponent may not add the deficit to his score.

W. H., San Francisco.—1. The cards being played as follows, at cribbage, Jack, 4, 4, 2, 3, 1, 2, 3, the player of the last tray makes a sequence of three. Your other counts were correct. 2. Our opinion is that a player of ordinary skill can do it.

W. Y. E.—1. They have no claim to the title, as the race in question was not authoritatively announced to be for the championship; besides which they have since been challenged and refused to accept.

Doane, Dundee, N. Y.—"Rosedale" is the property of Lester Wallack, and L. F. Barrett has acted it many times. By writing to Theodore Moss, Wallack's Theatre, N. Y., you can learn on what terms a copy could be procured.

G. Brown.—1. Dan Marble was a Yankee comedian, and an excellent actor. 2. One that you can use as a hunting-case, or face. 3. Jules Jurgensen watches are considered among the best manufactured.

Gus. Weaver, Amsterdam.—Coburn and Mace fought near New Orleans, La., Nov. 28th, 1871. Eleven rounds was the number actually fought, but they came up for the twelfth, blows not being exchanged, however.

Carrow, Baltimore.—1. The fastest mile record on the American turf is 1:43, made by Kalma and Fadladeen. 2. Herod's fastest mile time was 1:43¼, 1871.

J. R. D., Utica.—A steeple-chase is a race where there are several jumps, over fences, walls, rails, hurdles, etc., to be taken.

Vesuvio Guz.—1. The Buffalo trotting meeting commences Aug. 6th, and lasts four days. 2. It is probable Goldsmith Maid will trot there.

Missouri Farmer, St. Louis.—As Dexter did not win a heat in his race against Ethan Allen and running mate, he has, of course, no record in that race.

Murray.—Dexter trotted against Ethan Allen and running mate on Fashion Course, L. I., June 21st 1867; the latter winning in 2:19; 2:18.

H. C. T., Philadelphia.—1. No. 2. Pomeroy's Democrat, including the daily, weekly, and La Crosse, claims a circulation of 220,000 copies.

Kalyra.—Dexter's time was beaten by Goldsmith Maid, Sept. 6th, 1871, at Milwaukee. It was a regular course and the time was recorded.

Curtiss Reaser, Chicago, Ill.—1. A. S. Pennoyer has closed his engagement with Lotta, and can be addressed in care of this office. 2. Lotta's visit to Europe is for pleasure.

Ned Dick.—The bases are 90 feet apart; home base is distant 127 4 inches from 1st base, and 42 back in the same distance from 1st base. The pitcher's front line is 45 feet from home base.

W. R.—The winning of a series of three out of five is not sufficient. The whole five games must be played, even if the first three are won.

Mauer Angusta, Ga.—1. Australia, with an area of 3,270,000 square miles, is about half the size of South America. 2. It is pronounced as spelt.

R. S., Windsor Locks.—It is not an easy task; but direct application to managers by note, or by advertising in the Clipper, will accomplish it.

Coatesville.—A's guess, being high, and he having made the two points he gave, with but one point to go, went out before B, with his low.

Sporter.—Goldsmith Maid, owned by Mr. H. N. Smith, of New York, by the record, the fastest trotting horse in the world. Her time, 2:17¼, has never been beaten.

O. T. Ass Co., Clinton, Mass.—If two men bet $20 each, of course the winner of the wager makes $20, while the other loses the same amount.

A. T., Brooklyn.—Dexter's time has been beaten twice by Goldsmith Maid; she having made 2:17 and 2:16¾, on two different occasions. See record in another column.

Dan Rogers, St. Louis.—Nothing has appeared in our columns upon the subject, and therefore we cannot give place to your communication.

W. E., Peeples, N. Y.—1. In some the heels are padded; in others, they are not. 2. Vinegar and horse radish is good. 3. Do not know where you can obtain such a work. 4. Very likely.

Matt Kaufman, Mich.—1. B having but one to go, and holding high, of course went out first, so the point thereby is always to be taken.

Tom H. S., Sharpsville.—The umpire was wrong. The base runner not having been forced off by the striker, could return to their base.

Sam. S. Finlay, East Buffalo, N. Y.—We do not know William Carlton's present whereabouts, but a letter addressed to him, in care of this office, will reach him.

Inquirer, New Orleans.—The game was decided in favor of the Baltimores also by the umpire, which holds good until reversed by the judiciary committee.

O. H., Memphis, Penn.—You must address a letter to the Sage of Chappaqua yourself, if you wish to know his height and weight.

Perplexed.—You cannot order your partner up, when it is understood there is no assistance.

Canvasser, Baltimore.—1. No horse ever ran a mile in 1:41. 2. No horse has no record of 1:40.

R. H. S.—The annual election occurs on the second Tuesday in November, which, this year, falls upon the 12th.

Fusion, Akron, O.—If Mr Hinson never attracted $12,000 in a single evening's performance in this city.

Nicholas Gazzaly, Brooklyn.—There never was a premium on single eels.

Pleasure.—The Crystal Palace, New York, was burnt Oct. 5th, 1858.

Stanbler, Urbana, O.—It is so alleged, and we see no reason to doubt it.

Havemstraw.—There are no rules governing the game, and we do not answer questions respecting it.

J. L.—Kopito minstrels was burnt cork mixed with water to blacken their faces and hands.

Misdemeanor Baron.—Miss Ella Germon was born at Augusta, Me.

J. J.—A bone, as he bet that the Athletics would make more, which they did not do.

Mark Twayne.—A "fair foul" is a ball hit fair, close to home base, which rebounds foul.

R. and R.—The rules do not require the catcher to stand so many feet from the home plate.

J. S.—The Mansfields have defeated the Atlantics by a score of 5 to 0.

Reader, Milford, Mass.—We know nothing of the concern, except what the advertisement states.

W. C. P., St. Louis, Mo.—Miss Jule Vernon is still living, and a letter addressed to her in care of the office will reach her.

Foley, Kansas City, Mo.—He has neglected the matter. As soon as our stand is remodeled one shall be sent you.

Fusion, Governor's Island, N. Y.—Bordentown, N. J., is not a city.

The Glasgow.—The foul received has been called down by you.

Flyer, Worcester, Mass.—The fastest three mile running time is 5:27¾, by Norfolk, in California.

H. B.—Forrestville, Ct.—The dice must be fairly thrown out of the box and not covered by it.

A. Gratton, Montreal.—Hazard is not the champion snarler of anything, never having received credit for one bite.

Constant Reader, Cincinnati.—The fastest running time is 39 sec. 2 inches, 440 yards, at Gilmore, Eng.

Subscriber, Cincinnati.—Your question cannot be decided in this office. Bets can be bought in this city at Kennedy's, Gaff's, and Welch's, with thanks; they will prove valuable additions to our collection.

Reporter.—Your time and space are too valuable to answer such trifling questions as you ask.

T. and W.—Hank Ward pulled stroke in the victorious crew at Saratoga last year.

Constant Reader, Mobile, Ala.—Coburn and Price fought on the 1st of May, 1860.

Ross Scrutiny, Savannah.—We cannot use publication of such articles some time ago, and do not wish to begin anew.

Edwin F. Russell, Philad'a.—Many thanks for the trouble you have taken in oblige us. They will appear in good time.

A. Burr.—The party that has the wood beat the other's throw, but only deal him, lost, as a tie is not a beat.

R. J. S., Wilkesbarre.—1. Search a geography. 2. Philadelphia has several thousand more buildings than New York.

F. Dodgeans.—1. His jaw was not injured. 2. He was arrested, bailed, and jumped his bail.

G. B. R., St. John, N. B.—The Derby of last year (1871) was run for on May 31st.

Dick, Syracuse, N. Y.—Why did you not give the names of the pieces that were acted during the week? Please do so in future.

Dick Scottish.—Not upon record. Harry Reed ran 440 yards in 49½ seconds.

John Magee.—A Harvard four-oared crew is said to have rowed two miles in ten minutes.

A. M. L.—It is not the series of best three out of five that counts, but every game of the five played.

Dixie, Mobile, Ala.—We will be pleased to receive brief reports of such event. 2. It does.

T. M. M., Boston, Mass.—Miss Geraldine returned from Europe a few weeks since.

J. M. R.—The Cleveland nine play in Boston and New York the first week in July. 2. Yes; a third.

A. M. C.—1. Yes; the game was forfeited 9 to 0. 2. Yes. 3. Yes.

J. Forrer, Phila.—They are very acceptable, thank you.

O. C. R.—See answer to Yorkville in last week's Clipper.

Coatesville.—Mollenux was beaten twice by Tom Cribb.

American Girl.—As the mare did not start the bet is off.

Subscriber, Chicago, Ill.—Use lemons and butter-milk.

White Charles, Boston.—Thanks for the contribution.

C. O. B.—Dexter's fastest mile record is 2:17¼.

An Admirer.—1. No. 2. Watch our columns.

Fusion.—Accepted for publication.

B. E. F.—White.

INDEPENDENCE DAY.

Before the issue of another Clipper the ninety-sixth anniversary of the declaration of independence will have been numbered with the events of the past. In various parts of the country preparations have been going on for some time for a proper observance of the day, and where the public authorities fail to keep up the good old custom of celebrating the occasion, private enterprise will contribute the necessary funds towards making the day enjoyable to old and young alike. There is a disposition in certain one-horse cities to let the 4th of July pass by without any other recognition than that which may be given to it by the private citizen, and this is notably the case in Philadelphia, where there will be no public celebration, the councils of that city having refused to appropriate the sum of two thousand dollars to defray the expenses of a public display; and one of the journals of that literary city, the Press, has spoken in terms of indignation against the persecution of Jesuits in Germany, and referring to Bismarck, hoped that the "bone may fall that will complete the overthrow of the Colossus."

THE CHAMPIONSHIP RECORD.

One Third of the Season.

The 30th of June closes the first two months of the season according to the playing of the clubs for the championship, and below we give the full and correct record of the games played up to Sunday, June 30th, which shows the Bostons in a decidedly advantageous position to win the champion streamer for 1872, they having lost but one game from the date of their first match in April to their last in June. Second on the list comes the Athletic Club, with a record of four defeats out of sixteen games played, the Baltimore game, of course, counting as a defeat until the decision of the board is reversed by the judiciary committee. The third in rank is the Baltimore nine, with a record of nine defeats out of twenty-five games played. The Mutuals are fourth, with eight defeats out of twenty games, the Troy nine losing both and the Cleveland last of the regular stock company nine. Of the co-operatives the Mansfields occupy first place and the Atlantics second, the Nationals being third and Eckfords last, all having played but a few games, of course, counting as a defeat until the decision of the judiciary committee. A TRIBUTE TO BELLA GOLDEN.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

It is portray a life—or character the dead—
Whose souls—God not—have long since found a Heaven—
Be man's great masterpiece—of art the head—
To thee, it is pre-eminently given.

Thy winsome look, with darkly flashing eyes
And nameless grace, of more than heavenly form,
Might calm the star-beams that express the sky,
Or chain the lightning on the spell-bound storm.

Where'er the public heart o'erflows with pride,
While sweetest love or passion wakes the strain—
Whatever joy or sorrow doth betide,
One heart throbs wildest—but it throbs in vain.

When poor "Ophelia," as the "fantastic" love,
Or "Black Eyed Susan," "Spy" or little "Dot,"
Our inmost pity, grief, or rapture move,
Fair nature cevines, but she murmurs not.

Thou ever be it; while the tragic queen
On her true throne enthumphed reigns,
For thee—sweet Bella—laurels still more green
Shall crown thy efforts and reward thy pains.

THE SCRAP BOOK; OR,
THE LIFE OF AN ACTOR.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER

BY HANK DARLEY.

One day, while looking over an old scrap book of programmes, I saw the name of Halsey Wild. The scrap book was a loan from Harry Archer, a professional friend of mine, and an actor in one of the Broadway theatres, in which I hold the rather prominent position of first juvenile. I carefully perused the scrap book again, and in the year eighteen forty-nine see the names of Mr. and Mrs. Halsey Wild cast for the parts of Iago and Desdemona in "Othello," Forrest playing the Moor.

As I look over the bills I see the name of him who had gone the way of all flesh; of her who had from the ballet ascended the ladder of fame, and was now foremost in the profession. I see, too, the names of Harry Placide, Hackett, Burton, Tom Hamblin, "Orphan of Geneva" Harrison, and many others who had either departed this life, or shrunk into obscurity, to be forgotten by the younger professionals.

But, somehow or other, the name of Halsey Wild was constantly running through my mind, and I resolved to find out from Archer who he was. We occupied the same room at the theatre, and that night I said to him:—

"Who is the Halsey Wild that played Iago to Forrest's Othello?"

"Who is he? Who was be, you mean. He has ceased to live; yet a better man never graced God's earth. Ned Forrest once told him he was born to fulfil Shakespeare's ideas of Iago."

"I seem to be used up in his life," I said, "I would be pleased to hear his story, if you have no objections."

"Not now, lad, not now; the story is too long." He wiped a tear drop from his eye and then continued—"But if you deem it worth your while to call on me to-morrow, you shall hear of Halsey Wild."

I observed no emotion on his part as the above dialogue was transpiring, but, as he turned to go, I thought I heard an almost suppressed sigh arise from his heart, and, watching him as he went towards the green room, I saw him wipe away the last gathering tears. Perhaps, thought I, the name of Halsey Wild is associated with his in many a frolic in their younger days, and he cannot check the rising sigh in recollection thereof. The following day I called on Harry Archer at his house, when he made me acquainted with the following story:—

"Halsey Wild was born in the green mountains, about eighteen twenty-eight or thirty. His father was a poor blacksmith in the little town of Breslau, working hard therefor the day and spending his money in the low taverns at night; and often would he return to his humble cottage delirious with the strong drink he had imbibed, and beat his poor, weak wife, and little Halsey, as though they were but yelping curs. When Halsey attained the age of twelve his mother left her brutal husband and came to New York, it being at that time but a village small. By hard labor she managed, with a little help from Halsey, to keep life within them. But she was not a man, and her excessive labor soon brought her to the grave. When she died there were none to cast a pitying glance on poor Halsey, or help him in his forlorn condition. To him it never rained, but poured; yet, for once, luck threw him in the company of one who secured for him a position in a dramatic company. At that time he was nineteen years old. He kept his situation at the theatre for almost a year, but scarcely earned sufficient to keep the wolf from the door. Such is the life of strollers he had only began, it seemed, for the theatre in which he was engaged closed for want of patronage, and again was he thrown upon the cold, unfeeling world. Alas! those were hard times to Halsey Wild.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"The once celebrated comedian, Burton, while walking along Chatham street, had his attention attracted by a lively air whistled by a young man coming from the opposite direction. As the two parties met, Burton stopped him, and inquired:—'Who is the author of that air you were just whistling?'

"Halsey, for he it was, looked at him for a moment and replied:—'I am.'

"Burton doubted Halsey at first, but there was something in his face that spoke of truthfulness above all other things. 'If you can compose such music as that you must run with me,' said Burton, 'I will bring you fame and your mark in the world, and gain a name for future generations to wonder at. What will you take for the copyright?'

"'Enough to sustain life is all I desire.'

"'Then call at that address to-morrow at eleven o'clock, and I will see what can be done for you,' said Burton, handing him a card, and departing for his home.

"Burton was one of the true blue style, ever willing to assist the needy, and alleviate the sufferings of those in distress. Halsey read the address Burton gave him, and a hope took possession of his heart in anticipation of profitable employment. He was at the theatre long before the time appointed, I assure you, and a smile rested on Burton's face as he made his new friend's diligence.

"'Well,' said Burton, 'I am glad to see you so earnest in your cause.'

"'When one needs assistance,' said Halsey, "tis that one's place to be ready at a seasonable hour, for:—

Those that would employment find,
Must leave the hours far behind.

"'You are rather poetical in your ideas, my young sir;' said Burton, 'but you are in need of work. I want a person to copy, do chores around the theatre, and make himself generally useful; and I think you will be very one I want; take an interes in your wel are from this time forth, and shall see that none molest you while pursuing your duties. In the meantime, if you should compose any music as good as your other piece, it may raise you a step higher in your new vocation.' Halsey's eyes swam with tears that glistened on his lashes like morning dew upon the grass. His heart was almost bursting—too full to express his gratitude for such unexpected kindness shown to him by a perfect stranger.

"'There, there, young man,' ejaculated Burton, in his usual blunt manner, 'none of that, or you'll have me blubbering, too.' Halsey was set to work that very day. Not long after Burton was announced to play one of his farces, that has made his name so famous in dramatic circles. In it he was to sing a new song, with music by HALSEY WILD, THE RISING YOUNG COMPOSER,' and it proved a success.

"Some weeks after, the 'Battle of Brandywine' was brought out before the public. The company, not being large enough to essay all the characters, Halsey offered his services, which were accepted. From that time forth he rose as an actor, and for three years remained with the company, with the exception of Halsey, who was retained. The new company was a young actress, to whom Halsey paid marked attention. There were other suitors for her hand though, and it was 'nip and tuck' with him all along. At last he won the battle. The enemy threw their arms at his feet, surrendered the fortress and beat a hasty retreat. After a short courtship he made her his wife, both vowing that nothing should them part. But how long did it last? that's the rub. How long did it last? the sequel will show. After rehearsals they would study; her assisting her, she him. At first their progress was slow, but it was sure. Their loves were like a summer day. Seldom did a cloud appear in the horizon of love to cross them in their life."

"She must have been exceedingly beautiful or had some great attraction about her, to cause him to be so infatuated," I said, not knowing exactly what to say after he had made a slight pause.

"Beautiful! he exclaimed:—

"The light of love, the purity of grace,
The mind, the music breathing from her face,
The heart, whose softness harmonized the whole,
And oh! that eye was in itself a soul!"

That was my idea of her, but I am digressing. It so happened that about that time a western manager visited New York, and seeing Halsey play at Burton's, was struck with his style of acting, and offered him an engagement to play leading business in a traveling company. He detested meanness in all its forms, and Halsey would not accept the engagement until released from his former contract with Burton.

"'It is seldom you receive such an offer,' said Burton to Halsey, after the latter told him of the offer he received, 'and I advise you to go on the travel for a while. You'll profit by it, I think. I am loth to have you leave my theatre, but it will be a great benefit to yourself and wife.' And Halsey and his lovely bride went on a tour with the western manager, when he won fresh laurels for his already popular name. His wife was an excellent actress, and her performance of Black-Eyed Susan to his William was a clever piece of acting. But time works wonders, and six months wrought a great change in their loves. His close study annoyed her, for she loved society, and, not having his, she sought and obtained it of others. He was pleased at first, but soon missed her sweet face from his side and pined for her. She received and accepted invitations to suppers, and at times her hours were rather late. He expostulated with her, but in vain; her feet were led astray by the glitter of society, and she was firm as the rock of Gibraltar. One morning she disappeared."

"How? What do you mean by disappeared?" I inquired of him.

"Not by the abductor's hand, nor by the knife of the murderer. She eloped with a firm supporter of society!"

"Did he follow and bring the guilty pair to justice?"

"No; he married her for love, willing to give his last to her; if she loved him no longer, so let it rest. Retribution was sure to come, and he let them follow their hearts. He continued in the profession, and the next season was engaged at the Walnut, Philadelphia, where he played with many of the leading lights of the United States. At the termination of his engagement there he organized a traveling company to support him as the star. On the Fourth of July, 18—, they were billed to appear in Pittsburgh. Near the close of rehearsal, a boy entered the theatre, and giving Halsey a note, said he would wait for an answer. The note read as follows:—

"'HALSEY WILD.—DEAR SIR.—There's a woman lying at the point of death in Crowley's Alley named Mary Rose, she says, but I have reasons to doubt it. In her sleep she often says 'Halsey Wild,' and on your arrival here, I take the liberty of writing you, as she may be a relative. Yours respectfully, DOCTOR F——e."

"What should he do? As the note dictated, or let it pass from his mind? His generous heart conquered, and he resolved to see the woman, whoever she might be, and, perhaps alleviate the sufferings of one in distress. After reahearsal he called at "Crowley's Alley" to see the sick woman. She was lying on a coarse straw bed, placed in one corner of the room, with covering not sufficient to hide her wasted form. She looked up as he entered, and as her eyes encountered his, her face was illumined with the light of joy. It was like the meeting between Mrs. Haller and the Stranger. You can guess who she was—The wife of Halsey Wild. She told him her story. It was similar to that told by Lady Isabel Vine to Lord Mount Severn. The poor apologr for a man, she eloped with had left her after accomplishing her ruin. Not knowing which way to turn to earn an honest living, shunned by all that knew her, her only object was to sell her honor for gold. Step by step she descended into the lowest depths of crime, when disease laid its clammy hands upon her. In conclusion, she said:—'I cried hard to retrace my steps and be an honest woman, but the world was against me. Those that could assist turned me from their door when I asked for it, lest my presence should contaminate them. Aye! they spurned me from their door, sent me into the cold, unfeeling world, with no kind word. One kind look or word would have saved all this anguish. I have deeply sinned, I know, but do not curse me. Kiss me as you did of old, Halsey! Let me feel your loving arms twined around my neck, and I can die happier. See! there's a sweet cherub beckoning me on from aloft. Its tiny arms are entreatingly extended to me. Other forms robed in white, with mystic garlands twined in their golden, clustering curls, strike their harps with taper fingers and sing their anthems to a departing spirit. Mine eyes grow dim! I am dying, Halsey; but, when I am called before that great tribunal, say you will not curse me for blighting your life. It was in a moment of passion when another arm but yours encircled my waist, and a voice said you sought your solitude to be from my side, that's why I eloped. Oh! but I have prayed for forgiveness to my soul, and for yours. Say you forgive—say—you—forgive —and, naming her sedbcer, she passed away to the valley of death. Halsey had her decently buried, and then began a search for the destroyer of his wife's innocence."

"But how is it that you omit in your story the name of Halsey's wife?"

"You shall hear in time. He came to New York after disbanding his company, resolved to ferret out the miscreant who had destroyed the happiness of his life. He became a frequenter of the ball room, accepted invitations to balls, &c., that were extended to him; and one night, at the house of a friend, he encountered his victim, and there, before that vast assemblage, he branded him. 'Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord, and I will repay,' and he handed him over to the hands of the law; but one morning he was found dead in his cell. The blade of a knife had pierced his heart, killing him instantly."

"Would you know now who Halsey Wild was—who his wife was?"

"As I have heard the plot," I said," I would like to know the characters."

"I am Halsey Wild, and my wife was Mary Sylvester!"

And to-day there's an old-ish looking man waiting for the time when Mary and Halsey shall walk the golden streets of heaven and talk of their young days. And, reader, if you should perchance meet an old grey-headed man tottering through the street, help him along, for it may be Halsey Wild, who once entered, perhaps, for your mother's amusement. Will you do it?

DENS OF A GREAT CITY.

Prince Charles Bonaparte's Visit to the Sinks of London.

It has often been said that one-half of the world does not know how the other half lives. If this be true anywhere it is of London, that vast metropolis of contrasts, of palaces and hovels, wealth and poverty, learning and ignorance, philanthropy and depravity. In that immense conglomeration of streets and alleys there exist communities which live apart from the rest of the world, though they move and have their being in it; which govern themselves by their own rules and notions, and are tacitly allowed to do so, provided they do not break the laws, and so bring themselves within the clutches of the ever vigilant police, who never lose sight of them. Those who have read Dickens' account of a night visit to THE LONDON "SLUMS" under the escort of a police inspector, published some years ago in All the Year Round, and the same author's description of an opium-smoking den in the first chapter of "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," will understand what kind of communities are alluded to. Through the pen of the novelist these dens of infamy have obtained world-wide notoriety, insomuch that the curious come from far and near to get a glimpse of them, in order to convince themselves that such places are a reality and not the creation of fiction. A glimpse, indeed, is sufficient in most cases to satisfy the visitor that such plague-spots do exist, and are a fearful disgrace to a nation which considers itself one of the most enlightened and philanthropic, as it is one of the most wealthy, on the globe. The London Echo, a short time ago, gave an account of a visit of from Rome, to these dens. We are not told that he went expressly from Rome to London for the purpose of visiting them, but we may infer that it was one of the objects of his journey, since he took the trouble to apply to M. Filou, Private Secretary to the ex-Emperor Napoleon, at Chiselhurst, for instructions how to manage the affair. M. Filou, accordingly, requested the well-known dramatist and writer, Blanchard Jerrold, to act as the prince's conductor, and the gentleman and party proceeded in close escort, and, attended by the suite and a special reporter —where is it that special reporters will not go?—the prince descended to the infernal regions, after the manner of Æneas in the Æneid. Indeed, there is no small similarity between the two. The party proceeded about 10 o'clock at night to that portion of East London called Whitechapel, notorious for its

and though they were "the observed of all observers," they penetrated through dark, dirty and narrow lanes and passages, to the quarters where the regular professional thieves and burglars find shelter. Some idea of the extent of this colony may be formed from the special reporter's statement. He says "rents are high in the locality, and the householders pay them willingly as the price of an inestimable privilege—that of herding together—that of being in the midst of the 2,220 establishments kept by the receivers of stolen goods, and the 8,000 resorts where the weary mind may be refreshed after the labors of the day, and where confederates meet without fear of intrusive listeners, and plots are hatched and plunder calculated." The reporter is speaking to Londoners, who are familiar with the extent of what is called Whitechapel, and who, therefore, feel no surprise at the above statement; but foreigners need to be told that the districts in which those 10,000 resorts are publicly open, to say nothing of the filthy dens in which

THOUSANDS OF OUTCASTS OF BOTH SEXES

dwell, extend over more than seven square miles, and includes the resorts of sailors along the north shore of the Thames, from Wapping Old Stairs to the Docks, and from the river to Bethnal Green. Prince Bonaparte was introduced into some of these thieves' kitchens and public houses, where it would be dangerous to go without an escort of police, and he paid the price of his welcome by "standing treat," in the customary when "swells" visit such places. What his feelings were at witnessing this seething mass of human depravity, we are not told; there are persons who would think it prime fun to see such sights, while others would sicken at them. The reporter adds that the party visited some of the

and places of amusement, music halls and dancing saloons, and were surprised at the general order and decency which prevailed. A proof that there are redeeming points even among the most degraded; and it is to these points that the London Home Missionaries are now appealing in hopes of rescuing some of these outcasts from the abyss they are in. But after all it was found that the Saturnalia of drunkenness and debauchery were at their height in Ratcliffe Highway, a thoroughfare which plays a prominent part in Dickens' novel, "Our Mutual Friend;" a long, narrow, ill-lighted street, bordering the Thames, and frequented almost entirely by sailors, a very quarrelsome, motley lot, composed of all nationalities, and by those who minister to the pleasures of "Jack Ashore," relieving him of his money and occasionally of his life.

THE PRINCE AND HIS PARTY

there witnessed the drinking and the dancing, the yelling and the fighting, and what followed is thus described by the reporter:—"Mr. Jerrold conducted the party, at Prince Charles' desire, to the infamous dens in Shadwell, where the opium smokers of London collect for the enjoyment of their ghastly dissipation. Room after room, filled with smokers in different stages of stupefaction, until at last the explorers reached the chamber where Charles Dickens first conceived the idea of 'The Mystery of Edwin Drood.'" The place was exactly as the novelist sketched it. The husband (even as in the terrible nightmare of De Quincey) lay on the bed motionless, the little brass pipe having fallen from his hand; and beside him his wife, with pan and light and pipe, was extended in the centre of the foul and ragged bed, still smoking and gazing vacantly at the visitors." A visit to the casual ward at the neighboring almshouse concluded the night's "entertainment," being, perhaps, the most melancholy sight of all.

BOHEMIA AND BELGRAVIA,
A COMEDY IN THREE ACTS.

BY ARTHUR O'NEILL.

The comedy bearing the above title was produced for the first time at the Royalty Theatre, under the management of Miss Edith Bertram, on June 8th. The plot may be described as follows:—

Arthur Brabagon, a young man of excellent family, scorning to live as a idler, has adopted painting as a profession, and has become a lodger in the house of Mrs. Fenton, the widow of an artist. The affection he conceives for Amy, the pretty daughter of his landlady, is seen with very different eyes by two people. Mrs Fenton herself, who has a matrimonial scheme in view for Amy, and trusts to the beauty of Amy and her own diplomacy to secure a husband for her daughter who shall raise the entire family out of the mire of Bohemia into the distant firmament of Belgravia. Michael Angelo McGuilp, a soured, defeated and disappointed old painter, is the guardian of Amy, appointed by her father at his death. He looks upon the progress of Brabagon's suit with dislike and misgiving, and as Amy regards him as a second father his hostility is not to be despised. The whole of the first act is occupied with an exposure of the relations of the characters to each other. At its close the passion of Arthur has not been declared. The young man has indeed debated whether it would not be wise for him to act upon the suggestions of his friend, Louis Singleton, and of Mr. McGuilp, and resign his apartments and give up his schemes of life as impracticable. He has painted, however, a picture of Daily Vardon, the model of which, it is needless to say, is Amy Fenton, and he waits to hear the fate of this. Meantime his sister, Maud, with her husband, Mr. Bramley Coyne, M. P., a rich picture buyer and patron of art, arrives from the august regions of Belgravia. She is enchanted with all around her. Arthur, meditating a surprise for her, passes his picture off as the work of McGuilp, and the Belgravian matron, in a mood of uncommon benevolence, asks the entire party to her house to a Saturday reception, second in importance only accordingly, invades Belgravia. Thither goes McGuilp in a costume that might have belonged to the grandfather of Andrew Fairservice. Mrs. Fenton follows in a robe that would set raving mad a bull or a May meeting clergyman, and Amy goes in a costume that shows at once she was intended for Belgravia and has been out of her place in Bohemia. Little is done ere the end is reached except to show off the fashionable life. Some of the eccentricities that such an occasion might call forth are passed in review, and lady doctors, German metaphysicians and Indian princes throng the stage and are discussed. In the end, however, an incident is reached. Arthur, warmed perhaps by the generous wines, chooses the not very opportune occasion to avow his love to Amy. His proposals are overheard by his sister Maud, who, with McGuilp, has hidden himself in the conservatory, for the purpose of listening; Singleton, with a feeling that does him credit, refusing, though solicited by Mrs. Coyne, to take part in the transaction. At the height of the declaration the indignation of the listening woman cannot be restrained. She breaks forth, interrupts the tide of eloquence, and in no measured tones or words taxes Amy with having entrapped her lover. Maud's anger is pardonable. She has but one overpowering motive in life, love for her brother, not only for himself, but as the representative of their race. For his sake she has married the vulgar millionaire she calls her lord, and she cannot bear to contemplate the possibility of the marriage which will defeat all her schemes and render fruitless all her sacrifices. Her interference, however, is productive of little result in this act beyond the revelation of her mistress, and in attacking his sister, splashes, not entirely through inadvertence, some very innocent people standing by. After a vehement contest Arthur walks off with his sweetheart, and Maud falls on the sofa in the conventional attitude of emotion and rage. Little remains for the third act. This is occupied, accordingly, with the conquest of the sister's prejudices. In a cottage on Richmond Hill, Arthur, whom the quarrel with his sister has excited to such a point that a serious illness has been the result, is convalescent. He has been nursed by Amy, and the marriage of the hero may be immediately expected. Maud comes and tries hard and unjustly to break off the match. She appeals to her brother first, then to McGuilp, and lastly to Amy, but is defeated at all points. Ultimately, yielding to necessity, she confesses Arthur is too strong for her, and gives a grudging and ungracious assent. Fame and money seem both in store for the young couple, for the newspapers which arrive brim with congratulations upon the success of his picture, which appears to be the favorite of this year's academy.

ORIGINALITY.—No one need expect to be original simply by being absurd. There is a cycle in nonsense which ever and anon brings back the delusions and errors of an earlier time. The follies of the present day are transcripts, unwittingly produced, and with, of course, a few variations of follies which existed a century ago.

BONES GETS STUCK.

INTERLOCUTOR.—Where did you get that large red patch that I observe on the seat of your trowsers, Mr. Bones? It looks like a dab of French rouge on the cheek of a Jamaica beauty.

BONES.—Why, you must know, a accident happen to me, and Sam Hopkins, what's makin' love to ole Shaneckses pooty daughter, Dinah, was de man. Both of us been rader sweet on de gal, and, somehow, I tought I had de inside track. Sam, you know, is great on jokes. Well, yesterday he tye its ass and Dinah to take a promenade down to de foot ob de pier to see de glorious sunset, dough I couldn't see what for he want to inwite me and Dinah, too.

INT.—He wanted to dock you of your privileges, but, as you likened yourself to a horse in taking the inside track, it is perfectly right that you should be docked.

BONES.—He was pooty well docked befo' we got free. Well, we stroll down very cheerful to de end ob de wharf, Sam on one side an' me on de oder, an' Dinah swingin' her parasol in de middle. Dar was a big log at de end, and says Sam, says he, "Hyar's de place where you can see de sunset to de best advantage; let's set down." And wid dat he took a seat on de log wid Dinah next him, and I took de only place left on de todder end. While we sot on de log I watch de sun settin' in a fog, and it make me feel poetic, and I make a dead set at Sam. Sam, says I, budding Dinah, look way ober yonder ober de water, says I; see de pigs friskin' and bleatin', an' de lambs gruntin' and rootin', an' de ole nanny goat scratchin' and cacklin', an' de hens buckin' and ba-la'.

INT.—Stop, stop, Mr. Bones—pigs don't frisk and bleat, and hens don't buck and ba-a.

BONES.—I mean't de pigs buckin' and ba-a-in, and de hens friskin' and bleatin'—

INT.—You've got the cart before the horse, with a vengeance.

BONES.—Well, dat wasn't it, neider—it was de lambs scratchin' and cacklin' and de nanny goat—no, de goat was gruntin' and rootin'—dere, now, you see how you gut me out wid your nonsence; but it's no mo' dan Dinah does—she puts me out when I sits up too late wid her.

INT.—But you don't get on with your story. You were watching the sunset on the log—

BONES.—No, I didn't say it was settin' on de log; we was settin' on de log—well, Dine' she begin to sigh, and, oh! dere was such a fire dat rage just dep in my bosom! it was like de fire in de volcano, dat burn all de fiercer de more you don't do nuffin' to it. Well, while we was sittin' on de log, talkin' and makin' love, de sun went down wid a splash!

INT.—That's too much, Mr. Bones; the sun went down with a splash! Why, it don't go into the water.

BONES.—O, yes it does—don't de poet say he scatter de dew drops; and what am de dew but de water dat he shooks off himself when he rises. Well, jus' den, Sam took out his watch and gib his arm to Dinah, and says, he, "Dine', I guess we'll go and dine, now." Wid dat dey git up and was movin' off, when, says I, "hold on—I'se goin' too." Den I try to rise, but de more I try de more I couldn't do it. I was glued to de log, jus' as if I'd been nailed dere. It's a tac', de mean cuss had bin and cubbered de log wid tar and sprinkled it ober wid saw dust, and when I foun' I couldn't git up I pull and pull till de bottom of my pants come off by de roots, and dat's how I gut stuck dere. So, you see, it's wid werry good reason I can say, I'm pasting for Dinah.

INT.—Well, since you got stuck, we'll let you off, while we harken to our black warbler.

"Twas but the Accent of a Child."

SONG AND CHORUS.

At eve when in the fireplace hid
The cricket to the kettle chirps,
And, as the flame dies out in fluid,
A peace profound day's din usurps,
As half in revery reclined,
My errant thought strange fancy weaves,
A low voice close to me behind
That whispers 'round our cottage eaves—

Chorus—'Twas but the accent of a child,
Yet oft my cares it has beguiled,
And, as I turned, its sweet face smiled,
From 'mid the trellis'd leaves.

This little trem of golden hair,
That once his forehead bright caressed,
As pure as those of angels are,
Full oft these burning lips have pressed;
And sweet the lover fain
One half the joy my breast that heaves,
As listening to the tones that melt
Into the breeze that fans these eaves.

Chorus—'Twas but the accent of a child, etc.

The little chair is vacant now,
The little cradle lacks the form
That press'd its sheets as white as snow,
Yet mem'ry still renews the charm;
And, though thou can't not with us be,
The fairy spell each sense deceives.
And thou seem'st present still as we Sit weaving fancies 'neath the eaves.

Chorus—'Twas but the accent of a child, etc.

AN OLD CIRCUS BILL.

THE WORRELL SISTERS IN THE ARENA.

Below we present an interesting memento of the past in the shape of a circus programme, in which may be seen the names of several old favorites, likewise those of the Worrell Sisters, who have since come into prominent notice as burlesque actresses. Mr. Worrell was one of the clowns of the troupe. To Mr. O. A. Morse, of Skowhegan, Maine, we are indebted for the bill.

CIRCUS.

Grand consolidation of the two largest and most popular equestrian establishments in the world, viz., the well known companies:—

WELCH'S NATIONAL CIRCUS AND HIPPODROME, of Philadelphia, and
LENT'S NEW YORK CIRCUS,

Forming two distinct exhibitions blended together, and both given under one immense pavilion for a single price of admission, reports of inferior companies heard, and humbugs forbidden. These consolidated companies will exhibit at SKOWHEGAN, ON TUESDAY, AUGUST 21st, 1855.

Doors open at 2 and 7 o'clock. Performance will commence half an hour after opening. Admission 50 cents. No half price.

The extensive and splendidly appointed cortege of this colossal establishment, comprising 200 men and horses, and requiring 30 carriages and baggage vans for the conveyance of the performers, the properties and paraphernalia used in each representation, will make a public parade upon entering town on the day of exhibition, preceded by the se plus ultra band car, drawn by ten beautiful cream colored horses, and containing S. V. W. Post's elaborated Thirty-piece Brass Band.

THOUSANDS OF OUTCASTS OF BOTH SEXES

dwell, extend over more than seven square miles, and includes the resorts of sailors along the north shore of the Thames, from Wapping Old Stairs to the Docks, and from the river to Bethnal Green. Prince Bonaparte was introduced into some of these thieves' kitchens and public houses, where it would be dangerous to go without an escort of police, and he paid the price of his welcome by "standing treat," in the customary when "swells" visit such places. What his feelings were at witnessing this seething mass of human depravity, we are not told; there are persons who would think it prime fun to see such sights, while others would sicken at them. The reporter adds that the party visited some of the

and places of amusement, music halls and dancing saloons, and were surprised at the general order and decency which prevailed. A proof that there are redeeming points even among the most degraded; and it is to these points that the London Home Missionaries are now appealing in hopes of rescuing some of these outcasts from the abyss they are in. But after all it was found that the Saturnalia of drunkenness and debauchery were at their height in Ratcliffe Highway, a thoroughfare which plays a prominent part in Dickens' novel, "Our Mutual Friend;" a long, narrow, ill-lighted street, bordering the Thames, and frequented almost entirely by sailors, a very quarrelsome, motley lot, composed of all nationalities, and by those who minister to the pleasures of "Jack Ashore," relieving him of his money and occasionally of his life.

THE PRINCE AND HIS PARTY

there witnessed the drinking and the dancing, the yelling and the fighting, and what followed is thus described by the reporter:—"Mr. Jerrold conducted the party, at Prince Charles' desire, to the infamous dens in Shadwell, where the opium smokers of London collect for the enjoyment of their ghastly dissipation. Room after room, filled with smokers in different stages of stupefaction, until at last the explorers reached the chamber where Charles Dickens first conceived the idea of 'The Mystery of Edwin Drood.'" The place was exactly as the novelist sketched it. The husband (even as in the terrible nightmare of De Quincey) lay on the bed motionless, the little brass pipe having fallen from his hand; and beside him his wife, with pan and light and pipe, was extended in the centre of the foul and ragged bed, still smoking and gazing vacantly at the visitors." A visit to the casual ward at the neighboring almshouse concluded the night's "entertainment," being, perhaps, the most melancholy sight of all.

BOHEMIA AND BELGRAVIA,
A COMEDY IN THREE ACTS.

BY ARTHUR O'NEILL.

The comedy bearing the above title was produced for the first time at the Royalty Theatre, under the management of Miss Edith Bertram, on June 8th. The plot may be described as follows:—

Arthur Brabagon, a young man of excellent family, scorning to live as a idler, has adopted painting as a profession, and has become a lodger in the house of Mrs. Fenton, the widow of an artist. The affection he conceives for Amy, the pretty daughter of his landlady, is seen with very different eyes by two people. Mrs Fenton herself, who has a matrimonial scheme in view for Amy, and trusts to the beauty of Amy and her own diplomacy to secure a husband for her daughter who shall raise the entire family out of the mire of Bohemia into the distant firmament of Belgravia. Michael Angelo McGuilp, a soured, defeated and disappointed old painter, is the guardian of Amy, appointed by her father at his death. He looks upon the progress of Brabagon's suit with dislike and misgiving, and as Amy regards him as a second father his hostility is not to be despised. The whole of the first act is occupied with an exposure of the relations of the characters to each other. At its close the passion of Arthur has not been declared. The young man has indeed debated whether it would not be wise for him to act upon the suggestions of his friend, Louis Singleton, and of Mr. McGuilp, and resign his apartments and give up his schemes of life as impracticable. He has painted, however, a picture of Daily Vardon, the model of which, it is needless to say, is Amy Fenton, and he waits to hear the fate of this. Meantime his sister, Maud, with her husband, Mr. Bramley Coyne, M. P., a rich picture buyer and patron of art, arrives from the august regions of Belgravia. She is enchanted with all around her. Arthur, meditating a surprise for her, passes his picture off as the work of McGuilp, and the Belgravian matron, in a mood of uncommon benevolence, asks the entire party to her house to a Saturday reception, second in importance only accordingly, invades Belgravia. Thither goes McGuilp in a costume that might have belonged to the grandfather of Andrew Fairservice. Mrs. Fenton follows in a robe that would set raving a bull or a May meeting clergyman, and Amy goes in a costume that shows at once she was intended for Belgravia and has been out of her place in Bohemia. Little is done ere the end is reached except to show off the fashionable life. Some of the eccentricities that such an occasion might call forth are passed in review, and lady doctors, German metaphysicians and Indian princes throng the stage and are discussed. In the end, however, an incident is reached. Arthur, warmed perhaps by the generous wines, chooses the not very opportune occasion to avow his love to Amy. His proposals are overheard by his sister Maud, who, with McGuilp, has hidden himself in the conservatory, for the purpose of listening; Singleton, with a feeling that does him credit, refusing, though solicited by Mrs. Coyne, to take part in the transaction. At the height of the declaration the indignation of the listening woman cannot be restrained. She breaks forth, interrupts the tide of eloquence, and in no measured tones or words taxes Amy with having entrapped her lover. Maud's anger is pardonable. She has but one overpowering motive in life, love for her brother, not only for himself, but as the representative of their race. For his sake she has married the vulgar millionaire she calls her lord, and she cannot bear to contemplate the possibility of the marriage which will defeat all her schemes and render fruitless all her sacrifices. Her interference, however, is productive of little result in this act beyond the revelation of her mistress, and in attacking his sister, splashes, not entirely through inadvertence, some very innocent people standing by. After a vehement contest Arthur walks off with his sweetheart, and Maud falls on the sofa in the conventional attitude of emotion and rage. Little remains for the third act. This is occupied, accordingly, with the conquest of the sister's prejudices. In a cottage on Richmond Hill, Arthur, whom the quarrel with his sister has excited to such a point that a serious illness has been the result, is convalescent. He has been nursed by Amy, and the marriage of the hero may be immediately expected. Maud comes and tries hard and unjustly to break off the match. She appeals to her brother first, then to McGuilp, and lastly to Amy, but is defeated at all points. Ultimately, yielding to necessity, she confesses Arthur is too strong for her, and gives a grudging and ungracious assent. Fame and money seem both in store for the young couple, for the newspapers which arrive brim with congratulations upon the success of his picture, which appears to be the favorite of this year's academy.

ORIGINALITY.—No one need expect to be original simply by being absurd. There is a cycle in nonsense which ever and anon brings back the delusions and errors of an earlier time. The follies of the present day are transcripts, unwittingly produced, and with, of course, a few variations of follies which existed a century ago.

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

They met where the music was soft and sweet,
And the perfume of roses filled the air;
She fell in love with his dark, dreamy eye,
And she fell in love with his raven hair.

And the smile that the foreign stranger gave
Made her soft, young heart, leap up and rejoice;
She fell in love with his languishing eye,
And she fell in love with his musical voice.

And he—O, the magical power of love—
Thought they never had met in the world before—
He was a penniless count, and he fell—
He fell in love with the diamonds she wore! J. H. B.

A JEWISH WEDDING.

Marrying a Brother-in-Law Pronounced Incestuous.

A wedding took place in this city recently which has furnished a text for discussion in the school for scandal among the sons and daughters of Jacob, and as it has elicited information with which the Gentile fraternity are probably not very familiar, besides being interesting, we quote from the Jewish Times and N. Y. Sun some of the more important particulars:—

About four years ago there died in this city a gentleman who belonged to a wealthy and widely-known German Jewish family. He left a widow, whom, according to the custom of his brothers wooed and won. Both are rich, and their union was desirable from a business point of view. It was said to be also a pure love match, although both have passed the age when hearts beat high. The connection, however, both sides favored the union. A powerful obstacle was in the way of the marriage. The relationship between the principals, according to Jewish law, prohibited it beyond the possibility of evasion. It was not simply that of brother and sister-in-law, but one looked upon as brother and sister. Man and wife are regarded as one flesh and blood. The brother of the husband is the brother of the wife. Such a union would be incestuous. Generations ago an orthodox European synod so pronounced it, and threatened with excommunication all who should become guilty of it. Jewish reformers have been even more rigorous in the maintenance of this position, and so says the Jewish Times in the following paragraph:—

SOLEMNIZATION OF AN INCESTUOUS MARRIAGE.—The Rev. Dr. Huebsch has just married a man to his brother's widow, there being children by the first marriage. Whoever has read the Pentateuch must know that the Mosaic law forbids such a union as incestuous. No rabbi, for a certainty, has ever knowingly officiated at such nuptials, and in the present case the interested parties were repulsed by several rabbis to whom they applied for assistance in the accomplishment of their wishes. We would gladly believe that Dr. Huebsch was ignorant of the circumstances of the case, but even then he would have been guilty of inexcusable negligence, since the identity of name in the bride and bridegroom must have called his attention to their relationship. Or if it possible that they concealed the facts by an unequivocal lie! However this may be, Dr. Huebsch owes it to the public as a sacred duty that he explain the transaction.

Dr. Huebsch is the rabbi of what is known as the Bohemian Synagogue in Avenue C, and the following is an extract from his reply:—That I have united a man to his brother's widow, there being children by the first marriage, must be under a misconception—not fraudulent silence, but unequivocal, impudent falsehood. As soon as I noticed the identity of name in the bridal pair, I asked the groom of what degrees his relationship with the deceased husband of the bride was, and I had no reason to doubt its truth. For precaution's sake, all the marriages set down for the following week are on Saturdays proclaimed from the pulpit in my synagogue, so that any possible objections and impediments may come forth. This was also in the present case, but no information regarding it was brought to me, and on the appointed day I officiated at the marriage, utterly ignorant of the shameless artifice of which I had been the victim. It was nearly two weeks before the circumstance of the case were explained to me, and then it was by accident. My first step after that was to seek the man who by such deceit had gained my assistance in contracting this sternly forbidden union, and to explain to him that no rabbi has the power to give legality to such wedlock; that the marriage is null and void (Ebenhaezer XV, 1); and that he could not view the union as valid, even civilly, until it had been solemnized by a proper civil officer. The man replied that he had no objection to a civil marriage, but that an orthodox rabbi in this city had assured him of the validity of a religious union, even under such circumstances. This assertion I emphatically denied, and countries should be wrong now; that which was all that time a sacred duty should be now a violation or law. It may be safely set down as a principle that that which the Sacred Scriptures enjoin as a personal religious duty at the time in which they were written may advance in true knowledge and enlightenment. To us, however, who always prefer the plain teachings of the Bible to the doubtful wisdom of this or that man, no difference where or when he lived, this marriage is not merely wrong in much

AQUATICS.

SCULLERS' MATCH BETWEEN
Ellis Ward and J. J. O'Leary, for $1,000.
WARD WINS WITH EASE.

At Lake Quinsigamond, near Worcester, Mass., the match between the above named men, to row three miles, for $500 a side, came off on Wednesday, June 26th, and, somewhat contrary to expectation, resulted in a hollow victory for the representative of the Empire State—Ward. The winner, who is the youngest of the celebrated Ward family, is now in his twenty-fifth year, stands 5 feet 11¼ inches in height, and on the day of the race kicked the beam, in racing rig, at 183¼ lbs., being in superb condition. During the past three or four years Ellis has figured successfully in several single scull races, and has thrice pulled with a crew composed of the brothers—thrice in six-oared races, and at the four-oared international contest on Saratoga lake, last September. He has beaten John Biglin, John Mekeel, Gil. Ward, Michael Glenny, Wm. Hayes, Thos. C. Butler, "Prudeen" Harrington, James Ten Eyck, M. Hurley and others, and is as finished an oarsman as ever dipped a blade in our waters, though it is questionable whether or not his endurance is sufficient to enable him to show winning speed in a longer race than four miles at the utmost. O'Leary, though having gained considerable reputation locally, is but little known outside of Massachusetts, to the waters of which state his rowing has been confined. He is twenty-eight years old, is an Irishman by birth, reaches an altitude of 5 feet 11¾ inches, and had reduced himself from about 200lbs. to 162lbs., which was his weight on the day of the race. His first public appearance as an oarsman was made in July, 1868, at Lake Quinsigamond, being beaten by E. B. Hamilton, whom he afterwards defeated. He was likewise beaten by J. Landers, of Lowell, and beat him, also vanquishing Harrington, of Springfield. He was a member of the now defunct Stephen Salisbury crew, pulling the stroke oar and assisting to win the local championship of the lake. He was without the services of a trainer up to within a few days of the race, when John Biglin took him in charge, and improved his physique by building himself up, he having reduced his weight to about 155lbs. A few days previous to the date fixed upon for the race he was attacked with pleurisy, caused by a severe cold, and was obliged to apply blistering lotions to his right side. It was thought that he had entirely recovered, however, and when he stepped into his boat he looked well and said he never felt better. He pulled in a cedar shell, with sliding seat, built by Jewett, of Dunston-on-Tyne, Eng., 29 feet 10 inches long, and 11¼ inches beam, named the Robert Jewett. Ward's boat was constructed by the same builder, had a stationary seat, and in dimensions was 31 feet long and 11 inches wide, bearing the name of Argonauta, in honor of the well known amateur association at Bergen Point, the members of which have always been staunch friends of Ellis'. In the neighborhood of four thousand spectators made the trip from the city to the lake shortly after mid-day, unmindful of the disagreeable, penetrating, drizzling rain, which fell steadily during the early portion of the afternoon. Pools were sold in front of the Quinsigamond House, and notwithstanding the preponderance of O'Leary's partisans, and their great confidence in his success, Ward was the favorite, bringing $100 to O'Leary's $80 and $20. The friends of the New Yorker were provided with the most money, and were less chary of risking it than the opposite side, who were out-bet before the start. The referee was Mr. E. B. Hamilton (who also filled the position of final stakeholder), while Chas. Morris (formerly of St. John, N. B., but now of Boston,) and James Ten Eyck officiated as judges for Ward, and Stedman Clark and Daniel Downey for O'Leary. Shortly before half past three o'clock, the rain having ceased, and the water, which had been considerably "troubled" during the morning, became tranquil, the men were called to their stations and quickly appeared, being received with hearty cheers by the expectant assemblage. Ward was attired in blue knee breeches and white merino shirt, and had for his standard a scarlet handkerchief, while O'Leary wore similar knee breeches, was bare to the waist, and had a white kerchief tied around his head. They were speedily placed in line, and at the word made a good start, neither securing any perceptible advantage, and rowed nearly even for over two hundred yards, when Ward shoved the nose of his shell in front, and when Regatta Point, less than half a mile from the starting place, had been reached, he led by a clear length, cheered on by the cries of his jubilant adherents. Already O'Leary appeared to be in difficulties, his rowing lacking that power and precision which previously marked it, and it was painfully apparent to his backers that the New York boy was making the pace too hot for him. It is needless to follow the contestants over the course, as Ward continued to increase his lead at each stroke, and was so far ahead after rounding the upper stake that he stopped rowing once or twice for a few seconds, and finally won by a long distance, O'Leary not finishing. Ward was cheered heartily by all, as he deserved, for he had achieved a gallant victory, and proved himself one of the most accomplished oarsmen who ever sat in a shell. The time, as announced by the judges, was 21 minutes and 38 seconds, but as the stake-boats were placed some distance within the mile and a half limit, thus curtailing the course considerably, it does not go upon record. The principals and others who had the management of this event deserve censure for not having the stake-boats properly anchored; there was no excuse for neglecting to do so, as the course was accurately surveyed and marked out a year or more ago by a competent civil engineer. Those who witnessed this race, however, are nearly unanimous in the opinion that Ward is capable of eclipsing the fastest three mile time on record. We hope that when next he engages in a match race he will see to it that the course is full length, for oarsmen and others interested in the advancement of boating must be aware of the importance of the time record, and should not wilfully disregard such a matter.

YACHTING ON NEW YORK WATERS.
Race for the Wallack Cup, and Regattas of the Jersey City and Harlem Clubs.

The week just closed was almost as prolific as the preceding in point of yachting pastime in this vicinity, three very interesting events being decided, as above enumerated, commencing with the

WALLACK CUP RACE,

which came off on Monday, June 24th. It had originally been fixed for last season, but continued unfavorable weather caused a postponement. It was for a cup presented by Mr. Lester Wallack, owner of the Columbia, to the New York Yacht Club, to be contested for by schooners belonging to that organization. The course laid out was from Sandy Hook to a stake-boat off Long Branch, a distance of twenty-eight miles, and the entries were as follows:—

Name.	Owner.	Cubic contents.
Magic	P. Osgood	4,319
Tidal Wave	W. Voorhis	4,661
Eva	E. Burd Grubb	4,468
Madeleine	Commodore J. Voorhis, Jr	8,844
Peerless	J. R. Maxwell	2,732
Foam	H. Howard	6,408
Resolute	A. S. Hatch	13,755
Tarolinta	A. Kent

The morning was very muggy and a dense fog overhung the water, while scarce a breath of air stirred the leaves of the trees on shore or ruffled the surface of the bay. At noon, however, prospects brightened, the wind freshening a bit, though it was accompanied by a drizzling rain-fall, and the fog remained as thick as before. After waiting until 12.55 without further improvement being made, or seeming probable, the signal to get ready was given, and ten minutes later a second gun sent the competitors on their journey, which promised to be a long and tedious one. It was a flying start, and the Foam, Eva and Peerless were the quickest to get off, but before passing the imaginary line they were passed by the Madeleine. The starting time, taken by the judges, Messrs. W. Bond and Chas. A. Minturn, was as follows:—

Foam	12h.	57m.	40s.	Magic	1h.	0m.	44s.
Madeleine	12	58	58	Tidal Wave	1	1	36
Eva	12	59	10	Resolute	1	10	4
Peerless	12	59	46	Tarolinta	withdrawn.

Fortunately the wind, which had shifted to the southeast, became stronger after the hook had been passed, while the fog lifted and the sun shone forth resplendent. The Madeleine surprised all by the manner in which she outraced her antagonists, forging ahead grandly and reaching the turning stake-boat at least a mile in advance of all. The Tidal Wave was likewise on her mettle, having gone by the Magic, Peerless, Eva and Foam, the first named being left in the rear by all on the outward run. The time of arrival at this point was as under:—

Madeleine	3h.	50m.	5s.	Foam	4h.	18m.	16s.
Tidal Wave	4	11	52	Peerless	4	22	24
Resolute	4	16	2	Magic	4	25	50
Eva	4	17	11

During the return little occurred worthy of mention, the Madeleine adding to her vantage, and the Tidal Wave being left in the lurch again by the Resolute and Eva. The subjoined table gives the result:—

	Arrived home.	Actual time of race.		Time with allowance.
		h.	m.	h.	m.
Madeleine	6h. 26m. 40s.	5	36	5	36
Resolute	6	30	50	5	40
Eva	6	32	28	5	42
Tidal Wave	6	32	36	5	41
Peerless	6	33	15	5	33
Foam	6	34	30	5	37
Magic	7	10	50	5	50

The Madeleine consequently won the cup, which will be presented as soon as her owner recovers from his present illness.

THE NEW JERSEY CLUB REGATTA

was held on the same day as that of the Wallack cup race, the course chosen therefor being from the club-house, at Hoboken, passing to the eastward of a stake-boat off the Columbia club-house, foot of 57th street, N. R., thence to the westward of a stake-boat off Pleasant Valley, returning to the westward of the club-house mark; the course to be sailed twice over. Members of the club were alone permitted to handle the boats, and no ballast was allowed to be shifted after the start. The following sloops were entered:—First class.—Emma and Frolic; second class—Charm, Jessie, Ripple, Scratch Cat and Neptune; third class—Dexter, Dolly Varden and Lucy. The steamer Fort Lee had been chartered by the club, and upon it were the judges, committee and invited guests, including many ladies. The race was an enjoyable one, but does not require detailed description, the appended tables giving all the particulars necessary:—

UPPER STAKE-BOAT.
Ripple	4h.	43m.	Frolic	4h.	43m.
Jessie	4	51	Charm	5	00
Scratch Cat	4	51

HOME STAKE-BOAT.
Scratch Cat	5h.	35m.	00s.	Frolic	5h.	43m.	00s.
Ripple	5	55	45	Charm	6	01	30
Jessie	5	57	00	Emma	6	07	07

The judges were Captain Hope, Colonel Cloyd and James Strange.

The Harlem New York Yacht Club held their annual regatta on the 27th inst., seventeen vessels competing, but as the course was not completed in the stipulated time—six hours—the judges, Capt. Samuels and Mr. J. M. Lawyer, decided it "no race," and the regatta is to be sailed again, on a day to be fixed at the next meeting of the club. The Maud, of the third class, was the first boat in, having held the lead nearly all the way, but she arrived one minute after the allotted time was up.

AGREEABLE to the request of Fulton, whose boat was damaged en route from New York to St. John, N. B., the sculling match between him and George Brown, the Halifax champion, has been postponed until July 10th, when it will take place at Digby, N. S.

SOME PERSONS, jealous of his success at the recent Philadelphia regatta, have circulated groundless reports detrimental to George Englehardt's standing as an amateur, he has publicly declared that he has not the slightest intention of embracing rowing as a profession.

THE KATE CANTRELL BOAT CLUB is the name of a new organization recently formed at Nashville, Tenn. Their boat house is on the bank of the Cumberland river.

ROWING IN THE WATERS OF JAPAN.

An occasional correspondent, who wears the dark blue of Uncle Sam's navy, forwards in the following account of a boating event in the distant waters of Japan, participated in by jolly tars of the republic:—

U. S. S. ALASKA, OFF YOKOHAMA, JAPAN, MAY 12th, 1872.

EDITOR OF THE CLIPPER.—DEAR SIR.—The second contest for the Asiatic championship and $500, between the barge Daring, of the U. S. S. Colorado, and the fourth cutter, Minnie, of the U. S. S. Alaska, came off on the 11th inst., in Yoddo Bay, off Yokohama. In the first struggle, at Chifoo, China, the question of championship was not involved, as the Daring pulled but twelve oars, fourteen being her complement. The first championship contest, which resulted in favor of the Daring, has been duly chronicled in the columns of the CLIPPER, suffice it to say, in that race the Alaska's crew, exclusive of her officers and racing crew, lost more money than war ever wagered by a man-of-war'sman at like event; but the ebullition of defeat troubled only to rouse the ire of the Minnie's crew, and they forthwith adopted a course of systematic training which must insure success. The Colorados arrived in this port, from Hong Kong, highly elated in consequence of the Daring's victories over her fastest cutter and contenders in the east. The almost incredible news of the crack barge's success preceded her arrival here by a fortnight, but failed to intimidate in the least the backers of the Minnie, who were quite sanguine of her ability to leave the barge astern in the coming contest. The ultimate success of the Minnie in her obstinate struggle for the supremacy failed to convince her admirers that their confidence, though severely shaken by a recent defeat, had not been misplaced. At 1 P. M. the Colorado's steam launch, with both boats in tow, left the flag-ship's side for the starting point, three miles to seaward. Every vessel in harbor was "alive" to the occasion, while thousands lined the graved bank, and the English and French Asiatics in the city. Throughout the fleet the betting was invariably even, while ashore the civilians offered odds of 3 and even 5 to 1 on the barge. After a long, fruitless search for the buoy, which had been anchored the day previous, the umpires were obliged to lay out a new course, without the aid of nautical instruments; hence the error in distance, which should have been three miles, and was now over four miles. The rough state of the water rendered fast time impossible. However, both boats effected a good start, and no stubborn was the struggle for the lead, that they hung together, bow and bow, for the first mile and a half. Reaching the light-ship, the Minnie gradually drew ahead, and had increased the gap to five lengths when abreast the flag-ship, 3¼ miles from the starting point. The Alaskas, who had manned the rigging, now gave three tremendous cheers for their boat, which the Minnie acknowledged by still increasing the gap and crossing the U. S. S. Idaho's stern (the home stake) one minute ahead of the Daring. Time, 31min. 25sec. Financially speaking, the Colorado's boys are considerably to wind'ard of the Alaskas, but should we be fortunate enough to get on another match with them, we hope to be able to square yards. Upon the conclusion of the race Mr. Wiggins, the Daring's coxswain, came on board, and surrendered the emblem of championship. Officers and crew assembled en masse in the port gangway, to welcome his Majesty, "Tom," and consort to their new quarters. "Gentlemen," said Mr. W., "I surrender to you Tom the Game Cock of the East. You have won him honorably by defeating us on your own merits; but I hope you will take good care of him, as we intend to take him from you, if possible, when the Colorado and Alaska meet again." Upon being assured that his request would be strictly complied with, "Mac" left our ship, but not before receiving three rousing cheers from the Alaska's officers and crew. It is with a deep feeling of regret that the Alaskas learned of their orders to leave Yokohama, the barge intended to enter three boats in the annual regatta, May 21st, in honor of H. B. M. Victoria's birthday, when will be offered some very valuable prizes. However, our flag will be well represented by boats from the Colorado and Alaska. The Shenandoah, a new double-banked whale-boat held the sway for some time in the Mediterranean, has joined the Asiatic fleet, and it is probable that a match will soon be arranged between her boat and the Minnie.

BOAT RACE CHALLENGE FOR $10,000 IN 1837.

At the jollification consequent upon the arrival home at Savannah, Ga., of the Couper crew, after their victory at the late National Amateur Regatta at Philadelphia, Mr. A. M. C. Duncan, in making a congratulatory speech, indulged in some reminiscences of the past, which were very interesting, and comprised a review of the boating interests of the state from 1837 to date, giving considerable information that the majority of the members were in ignorance of. He alluded to the first regular meeting of the "Aquatic Club of Georgia," held on the 18th of January, 1837, at Frederica (Glynn county), when the subject of a challenge to the Carolina Association to run a race on the Savannah river was discussed. Mr. Duncan mentioned a race that took place in the ensuing month of the same year between Col. Dubignon's boat, Goddess of Liberty, and Mr. Dunbere's Columbia, both six oared and about the same size, but, by agreement, the Goddess was rowed with four oars only, and the Columbia, with her full complement. The race took place at St. Simon's Island. The Goddess was allowed 60 feet, on account of only having four oars. The race was against tide, and the distance half a mile. Won by the Goddess by eight feet, exclusive of the odds allowed her. A second race, the same day, between the Goddess and Richard Floyd's Devil's Darning Needle, resulted in favor of the former. The speaker also read the following challenge, which shows that boating in Georgia, thirty-five years ago, was well sustained:—

SAVANNAH, May 2d, 1837.

TO THE BOAT CLUBS OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK.—GENTLEMEN.—The aquatic boat clubs of Georgia having frequently heard of the fleetness of your boats and skill of your oarsmen, are desirous of comparing the speed of one of their boats with the speed of one of yours, on the following terms:—They propose to row their four-oared canoe boat Lizzard, one straight mile, opposite the city of Savannah, in fair and calm weather, against any four-oared plank boat built in the city of New York, not over twenty-seven feet three inches keel (which is the length of the Lizzard), for ten thousand dollars a side, two thousand forfeit. The race to take place in the month of November next. Should the day that may be agreed on not be fair and calm, the race to take place on the first fair and calm day thereafter. The stakes to be deposited in one of the banks in Savannah on or before the first day of October next. Should the terms proposed be acceptable, address Thos. R. Floyd, Jefferson, Camden Co., Ga., and particulars can be arranged by correspondence. CHAS. R. FLOYD, } Secretaries
HENRY DENSMORE, } C. G.

The speaker continued his remarks, giving an interesting outline sketch of a regatta of the Aquatic Club of Georgia, held at Brunswick in January of 1838, when the boats the Goddess of Liberty, the Devil's Darning Needle, Leopard, Emma and Sarah, Thomas J. Bryan and Caroline Ring were entered for the races. After the races were over, and the steamer Florida was about leaving the wharf, the Caroline King, with a mad-cap for coxswain, struck out into the stream, and actually beat her big competitor for a quarter of a mile, when steam got the better of muscle. In the evening a banquet came off at the Oglethorpe House, prepared by Mr. Davis, of Brunswick, when a good time generally was had. On the 28th of April, 1838, an exciting race took place on the Savannah river, between the canoe boat Lizzard, owned by the Camden County Aquatic Club, and the Star, built in New York and called the plank or clinker built boat, and owned by the Lower Creek Club, of Savannah. The race was well contested and won by the Lizzard. He closed with a well-timed allusion to the boating interests of our time and with a toast to the successful crew of the National Amateur Regatta Association, which was received with applause.

SCULLER'S RACE ON THE THAMES.

W. Spenser, of Chelsea, and C. Wilson, of Gateshead, Eng., rowed a scullers' race for £20 a side, over the Thames championship course, on June 8th, the contest proving an eventful one. Spenser has been long looked upon as a sculler of considerable promise, and prior to the occasion under notice had taken part in several minor matches, his best performances being against Frank Kilsby and Shepherd, of Chelsea, both of whom he defeated. He is, however, scarcely built on a scale big enough to make a first class sculler, his rowing weight being only 151 lbs. Wilson is a comparatively unknown man, his only prior public appearance being in a scullers' race in May of last year against Bagnall, at whose hands he suffered a somewhat easy defeat; but the fact of his having been matched against such a formidable opponent is a pretty clear indication that his friends entertained some opinion of his capabilities. Wilson scaled on the day of the race exactly 149 lbs., though he certainly looked considerably heavier. Spenser won the toss for choice of stations, and selected the outside, or Surrey berth, where he had the best of a very slack tide; and after two or three false attempts the men got off to a capital start by mutual consent about a quarter to 4. They rowed scull and scull up to Bishop's Creek, where Spenser showed with a slight lead, and steadily improving his advantage, came out three-quarters of a length in front at the Point. Here Wilson began to pick up, and, fairly collaring his opponent at the Grass Wharf, began to lead in turn, drawing himself clear, apparently without any effort, at the Crab Tree. He now crossed over and took Spenser's water, leading through Hammersmith bridge by a clear length, which advantage he maintained all round the bend to the upper end of Chiswick Eyot. Here Spenser spurted, and for a moment drew within a quarter of a length of the leading man; but the latter again shot away, and at the top of Chiswick Meadows was fully two clear lengths to the good—any odds being offered on him at this point. Wilson now commenced some most eccentric steering, crossing right over for the Middlesex bank, with his boat broadside to the stream, the upshot of which manœuvre was that by the time he had got his boat straight Spenser had not only recovered his lost ground, but was actually leading by upwards of a length. Once in front the Chelsea man seemed to take fresh heart, and, leaving his man with every stroke, passed under Barnes Bridge three lengths in advance, winning ultimately by double that distance. The betting at the start was 7 to 4 on Wilson. G. Drewitt showed up the winner, and James Taylor piloted the northern man. Mr. Wormald, of Bell's Life, officiated as sole umpire.

FRED. SINDERS AND WM. LONG.—These men were to have decided their seven hundred dollar match, in working boats, on the East river, June 24th, but though both men were on hand Sinders refused to row, his reason, as subsequently given, for so acting, being that the opposite party had a four-oared crew to accompany Long, and that he (Sinders) would not be allowed to win, even if he was able. Much indignation was occasioned by this refusal, a large crowd having gathered to see the race, and wordy warfare was indulged in to a considerable extent by the partisans of the principals. After this had subsided, a proposition was made to match Thos. Welsh against Long for a half century, to row in the old style working boats, which was agreed to instanter, and preparations were at once made for the contest. The course was about five miles in length, and Long at once took the lead, which he held up to the turning stake-boat, where he broke the gunwale of his boat, and had to stop pulling, his opponent passing him. Long induced parties near at the time of the accident to give him the use of their double scull shell, in which he overtook Welsh and beat him to the home stake-boat by about five lengths. Of course the action of Long in changing from a working boat to a shell was wrong, and the award of the stake-money was warmly disputed at the conclusion of the race. We have not learned how the referee decided the matter. The accident was most unfortunate for Long, who had the race easily in hand at the time of its occurrence. Sinders now wishes to make a match with Long to row on other water than that originally chosen.

THE LATE RACE ON THE THAMES.—Below we print a communication from the vice-president of the London Rowing Club in reference to the ungenerous comments made by the English press upon the Atalantas' performance, and the pace at which they went over the course:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE STANDARD.—SIR.—Your edition of this morning, and all other daily papers, have described the Atalanta four as excessively slow. They, however, rowed the course in 22min. 5sec. down stream, which I consider exceedingly good time, particularly for a losing crew.

It is my opinion that down races are nearly always slower than those rowed up with the tide, and most old watermen will agree with me, I think.

I will ask whether a four without a coxswain ought to beat an eight with one? Probably not. The average of Oxford and Cambridge races in 21 years is, over same course, 23min. and 5sec., up and down. The three downward races in that period were:—1846, 21min. 5sec.; 1856, 22min. 50sec.; 1863, 23min. 10sec. All these times are those of winning crews, probably the second boat frequently taking much more time.

With these facts before us, are we right in calling our Atalanta friends bad oarsmen? If they are, what horrid duffers must have rowed in some of our crack crews from Oxford and Cambridge, where we expect to find the perfect English oarsman.

Let us be just to our visitors, and give them honor where it is due. It is beyond a doubt that four alight, thin, plucky men have beaten our best oarsmen in time over our own course, as per average of 21 years, and they ought to be very proud of it. I sincerely trust their friends at home will be when they consider the facts. I am, sir, yours, &c., W. H. PLAYFORD.
London Rowing Club, Putney, S. W., June 12th.

MATCH YACHT RACE.—On June 26th a match made some time ago between the sloop yachts Dart, of the Union Club, of Brooklyn, and the Brogan, of the Jersey City Club, for $150 a side, was brought to a conclusion. The course was from the Can buoy off Robin's Reef, around the light-house, thence to a stake-boat off Bates' club-house, the course to be gone over four times, making about sixteen miles in all. The Dart is the property of H. Rusk, and is 19 feet 10½ inches in length; the Brogan is owned by Capt. Murphy, and her length is 20 feet 2 inches. The wind was blowing very hard from the north-east and the sea was rough, but it was determined to proceed with the race. The Brogan got away with the lead, but was speedily given a sight of the heels of the Dart, which thereafter was never headed in the race, and, being handled splendidly, finally won by a good distance. The following table gives the time of starting and of arrival at different points:—

	Start.	1st Stake-Bt.	Home.	Stake-Bt.	Home.
Brogan	10.41.20	11.19.25	11.49.35	12.24.40	not timed.
Dart	10.41.40	11.16.02	11.49.05	12.16.30	12.39.10

The Dart made the race in actual time in 1.57.30; corrected time, 1.56.30.

BATTEAU RACE.—On Friday, June 21st, a batteau race took place at the Isle of Hope, near Savannah, Ga. The time of starting and arrival is below given:—

	Start.	Arrived.		Start.	Arrived.
Elizabeth	4.30	7.45¾	Fidler	4.31	7.46½
Julia	4.31½	7.46	W. H. K.	4.32	7.50
Twin sisters	4.19	no time (ks)

THE NASSAU AND VESPER CLUBS didn't row their four-oared shell race on the 24th ult., as appointed, in consequence of the latter declining to row at present. It is rumored that the cause of their refusal is the withdrawal of Tom Fearon from the crew, because it was thought advisable to place somebody else in the bow seat.

ROWE, PURDY & CO. to take the place of Geo. Price, now training the Bowdoin College crew, after the race with Brown on the Annapolis river.

THE AMERICUS CLUB REDIVIVUS.

On the evening of the 24th ult., about half a century of the Americus Club met to consider about re-organization, with Mr. Wm. M. Tweed in the chair. The general expression was strongly in favor of reviving the club, and $4,650 was contributed by the members present, besides $3,400 sent in by absentees. It was resolved to re-open on July 4th, when it was expected that about 127 members of the Americus will take part in the festivities. John Voorhis, who purchased the lease of the club house, the furniture, &c., at sheriff's sale, has given up everything to the club and's a renewal of the lease is secured. The club house and fixtures have cost over $275,000. The house is complete, and the furniture, which is valued at $150,000, all in the best order. The club has four yachts, besides a fine new one now being built, which will be finished in the course of three weeks.

JAMES O'NEIL, of Troy, N. Y., now claims the title of "Amateur Single Scull Champion of the United States," no one having seen fit to accept his challenge, issued some time ago. Perhaps this assumption upon his part may induce some one to give him a tussle.

THE EXCELSIOR BOAT CLUB, of Boston, Mass., recently re-organized, and their four-oared crew is now composed of the following members:—C. Leonard (bow), W. M. Lincoln, M. W. Lillie; T. McManus (stroke); J. Barnwell (substitute).

THE BAYONNE YACHT CLUB have decided to hold their annual union regatta on the 17th inst. The yachts will be divided into four classes. Entries are to close on July 16th, at the office of the secretary, Chas. Woeltze, No. 16 Exchange place.

THE VICTORIOUS FOUR-OARED CREW of the Couper Club, of Savannah, Ga., were formally received by about fifty gentlemen, at the rooms of the club, on June 24th. They were complimented in speeches, and all hands passed a very pleasant evening.

A REGATTA, gotten up by the members of the Argonauta Rowing Association, will be among the attractions of the approaching national holiday at Bergen Point, N. J.

THERE is some talk of matches being made between Dick Deeley and George Englehardt; and the latter and Ed. Blake.

A NEW CLUB is to be organized at Ballston Spa, N. Y. The boat house will be situated at the south end of Saratoga lake.

GIL WARD will train the Yale crew for the approaching national College regatta at Springfield, Mass.

CRICKET.

ST. GEORGE CLUB GAME.

On June 24th the St. George Club were to have met the Harvard eleven at Hoboken, but the latter could not muster an eleven until after the jubilee, and so the match was off. Having arranged for a game, however, they got up a match, St. George vs. Field, the latter including members of the Jersey City and Staten Island Clubs. The following is the score of the day's play:—

St. George.		Field.
Bowman run out	12	Orr c Brancknerb Jones	5

Total	71	Total	36

In the second innings St. George scored 71 again to the Field's 32, and won by the totals of 142 to 68. Orr's 23 and Rance's 10 were the best scores in the second innings for St. George, and Robinson's 7 for the Field. Brewster's bowling was quite a feature, he being the king pin of the Jersey City Club. Orr, of the St. George, kept wicket for the Field side.

CALEDONIAN GAMES IN NEW JERSEY.

The sons of Scotia residing in and near Paterson, N. J., held away to the grounds adjoining Passaic Falls on June 24th, and there indulged in those athletic sports which they love so well. Donald Dinnie and James Fleming, the noted Scottish athletes, who lately arrived in this country on a speculative tour, participated in the games, and, of course, came off "first best" in nearly all. Below is a summary:—

One Hundred Yards Race—First, W. McIntosh; second, W. Goodie; third, F. Millar.

Throwing Heavy Hammer—First, D. Dinnie, 99ft.; second, James Fleming, 76ft.; third, John Anderson, 64ft. 11in.

Throwing Light Hammer—First, D. Dinnie, 106ft. 4in.; second, J. Fleming, 96ft. 5in.; third, John Anderson, 90ft. 6in.

Putting Heavy Stone—First, D. Dinnie, 37ft. 3in.; second, Jas. Fleming, 36ft. 5in.; third, Jno. Anderson, 30ft. 3in.

Putting Light Stone—First, D. Dinnie, 37ft. 4in.; second, James Fleming, 36ft. 8in.; third, John Anderson, 29ft. 6in.

Tossing the Caber—First, D. Dinnie; second, James Fleming; third, Frank Robertson.

Half Mile Race—First, W. McIntosh; second, Wm. Gland; third, Jas. Molton.

Running High Leap—First, D. Dinnie, 5ft. 6in.; second, James T. Coining and D. S. Keller, 5ft. 1½in. (tie.)

Vaulting with Pole—First, W. Robertson, 8ft. 6in.; second, D. Dinnie, 8ft. 4in.; third, L. Robertson, 8ft.

Hop, Step and Jump—First, D. Dinnie, 39ft.; second, D. S. Keller, 38ft.; third, W. McIntosh, 36ft. 9in.

Hurdle Race.—First, D. Dinnie; second, Jas. T. Coining; third, James Hulton.

Reel Dancing—First, James Fleming; second, D. Dinnie; third, Jas. L. Balmer.

Dancing Ghillie Callum—First, James L. Balmer; second, James Fleming; third, Robert Tariar.

THE BEARS of Wall street when led by keepers wearing Dolly Varden hats often become quite tame and take part in the innocent recreations of the aforesaid keepers, but the first recorded occasion upon which a genuine bear took a fancy to croquet was a few days ago at the Abbott House, Titusville, Pa., when Charley Matthews' big black bear broke loose and visited the croquet ground. The ladies and gentlemen then engaged in an interesting contest would not, however, choose him on either side, and, fearing that his bearship might get angry at the slight shown him, they precipitately left. Brutus, finding it too slow to play it alone, after a while allowed himself to be led back to his fastenings, and the field was again free to the fair and the b-brave. The excitement was so great that the local poet biled over thusly:—

Sound the hugag, beat the gourd!
"The bear is loose! and in the yard!"
Scatter pale to the fences flee,
For if he grabs you, gone you'll be!
Drop your mallets, leave the balls,
Scramble quick, for the hotel halls,
Leave all behind you, stop your "stewin,"
For as you live, your chased by Bruin!

A SUCCESSFUL START IN LIFE'S RACE.—On the morning of the 27th ult., the examination of candidates for Col. Wm. R. Roberts' nomination to Annapolis Academy was held in the hall of the Board of Education, this city. Twenty-six boys were present, thirteen from the public and thirteen from the private schools of the Fifth congressional district. Sixteen of the number were rejected by Dr. Skiff, the medical examiner. The examination was conducted by Superintendent Kiddle and his assistant, Mr. Harrison. Master John O'Keefe, aged 15 years, of 107 Washington street, stood first in the order of merit and is to be the nominee. His parents are in very humble circumstances, his father, Timothy O'Keefe, being an ordinary dock laborer. The announcement of the decision of the committee was received with applause, as the appearance of the lad denoted his condition in life. He was heartily congratulated by all present, but by none with such pride and emotion as his principal teacher, Mr. Duffy. Master O'Keefe, it was remarked by all present, bore a striking resemblance to ex-President Lincoln. A subscription is to be immediately started in the First ward for the purpose of securing his necessary outfit.

THE JUMPING CHAMPIONSHIP.—SEARLES TO LOOMIS.—We are desired by Ned Searles, the champion jumpist, to state that he is now prepared to fulfil the promise he made to Tom Allen last fall, to give his old opponent, Chas. A. Loomis, a chance to try for the championship, which business and the advanced state of the season prevented his doing when Allen issued the challenge. Searles says he will make a match to jump one single standing jump, spirit level, each man to be allowed eight trials, for from $2,500 a side upward; the match to be decided during the month of September, at either Buffalo, N. Y.; Cleveland, O.; Pittsburgh, Pa., or Utica, N. Y. If this suits Allen he can forward articles of agreement to the CLIPPER office, accompanied by a deposit, which will be promptly covered by the New Yorker. If Tom aint disposed to make the match for Loomis, any other aspirant for championic honors can be on, on the same terms, after the lapse of three weeks from date.

ACTIVITY.—Man is designed for an active being, and his spirit, ever restless, if not employed upon worthy and dignified objects, will often rather engage in mean and low pursuits than suffer the tedious and listless feeling connected with indolence; and knowledge is no less necessary in strengthening the mind than in preserving the purity of the affections and the heart.

Introductory Overture.

Monday, July 1st, '72.

This is independence week, when stump orators delight to soar into the "limitless bounds of space," and to hold high carnival as expounders of the constitution and defenders of the rights and wrongs of man. This time ninety-six years ago a determined body of men quietly assembled in the City of Brotherly Love, and there and then, after due discussion, signed articles of agreement by which all men were made free and equal, except the "niggers," who were left to the tender care of their taskmasters until Abraham Lincoln shied his castor into the American Ring, and, after a most stubbornly-contested struggle of long duration, Abe was pronounced the upper dog in the fight, and what our forefathers had left undone when they made such a gigantic declaration of intentions on the 4th of July, 1776, Abraham and his brethren completed to the year 1863, and the entire peoples of the United States became free and easy, and one man was made as good as another, and the pale faces were given the privilege to sit at the same table with the dusky forms of Africa's sunny sons; yea, to break bread with the sable harmonists, to drink wine with them, and eke to sleep with them as it might be mutually agreeable, perhaps. And now another year has rolled away upon the wings of the unfettered wind, and another anniversary of our national independence dawns upon us in the full plenitude of a fruitful republic. As a nation we stand upon the broad pinnacle of—pinnacle—broad pinnacle we say, as a united people we stand upon the apex of a broad pinnacle, as it were. Not as the abject slaves of a despotic despot do we live, and breathe, and take our vermiluge; not as bondmen do we grasp the truculent truncheon of freedom, and raise our votces high above the roaring roar of outrageous monarchists, but as regenerated sons of a downtrodden race we have burst the fetters that held us captive, and broken asunder the gyves that pained the willing arm; yea, we have marched on in a phalanx unbroken as the wild simeon; undismayed as the barbarians of the coast of Barbary, we have planted our standard in the impenetrable depths of the rocky summit, and hurled our poees of liberty down the festering jaws of a diseased oligarchy. The Hessian and the Thracian hordes may seek to undermine the impregnable foundation of our republic by their cunning, and by their power as lords of the stubborn waves, and the children of Abraham walk the waters dryshod as the Israelites of old, and the usurpers of human rights are swept away like the Sepoys of India before the belching cannon's mouth. Are we men? Are we descendants of a noble race, or come we from the Darwinian apes that clatter like frenzied women when their plans are blighted? As a union of states, we war upon all who would dare insult the feeblest member of our glorious confederation. When Alabama set forth her claims, did we go back upon the boys, and leave them to work out their own improbable problem? No; a thousand times, NO! [big type for this last no, Mister compositor man, and make no mistakes. —Ed.] Did we give them the shake, or leave them lamenting in the frigid coldness of an arcticterral winter? Ah, no! dear brethren, ah, no. What did we do?

We spurned the proud defiance of a hellish clan,
And raised our tongues in clarion tones for suffering Alabam.

We tore her gory banner from her foetid soils, and drove the foe incarnate to the very portals of her stygian pool. Those who have no 4th of July may well pine for the joys of the righteous, but we, proud in our beneficent hierarchy of universal freedom, calmly survey the scene in all the prismatic splendor of a starry night, in all the beautiful diachatulence of an eternal day. What! Let this mighty nation go bobbing round the thrilling threads of a living existence in pursuit of an ignus fatuust Never, NEVER, NEVER! [The type-setter will be careful in working in his types as we have marked them, so as to have the desired effect upon our ignorant and depraved readers.—Ed.] We advance like the strides of an impending avalanche; we gather force like a bellowing bull when the flaming flag is flaunted in his fiery face by furious ingleman; we strike like—like—we strike—strike—yea, truly, we strike like the unbought and unsodden eight hour men who sink or swim, survive or perish, as the case may be. But again:—

We stand upon the vortex of a world in arms,
We ask no quarter at the foe's alarms;
Unstained by freedom in her mightiest mood,
Like spitted gobbler we go round, doing good.

Let Hermepheus rankle when the dart has pierced his side, and Thucydides rebel at minions' nod, and even Octoverne's silvery locks be shorn, when we deny the equal rights of man. What has been done since the days of seventy-six? Behold vast temples of the drama rising high in every city, town and hamlet, and toiling sons of Tarquin emulate the heroes of the olden time, and myriad Tells shoot apples from a tyrant's head, and call the feat divine; fair music halls, with dazzling lights and phosphorescent rills, gleam clear and bold athwart the continent, and disclose to raptured view young maids in fleshings tight, and legs and busts that ravish every eye and set the throbbing heart on fire with insane delight. From the Atlantic's turbid waters to the soothing gurgle of Pacific's clime, mighty structures rear their "excelsior" heads that histrions may shine; and the Temple of Ephesus, burned by raging Erostratus, has had her sweet revenge in the monuments that Freedom rears upon her mountain heights. Thespis in his Athens home ne'er felt the pride our heroes feel when first they tread the anpolished boards of the lambient stage of Liberty, nor Spartacus, the gladiator, when he led forth servile hosts, could know the joy an actor feels in America's marble halls.

Oh, shades of the mighty! in years that have flown,
The wonders we've fathomed could never be known;
We've fought the good fight in the temples of fame,
And beat down the foe and won a bright name,
With a teoral-li-tooral, me dum dy.

And competition makes us wondrous wise, there is no doubt. Here in this ancient city, where Medes and Persians meet on a common level, and Greek meets Greek in arce array; where the Turk is permitted to smoke his pe in peace, and the descendant of Michael Aroon puff dudeen in affluence, and no man to make him afraid —we find the largest liberty accorded to the largest pe sons. The man who acts on the flying trapeze cannot lord it over the grounding who somersaults in the circus ring, nor the heavy villain of our tragic muse insult the sickly juvenile who takes a message on. This is freedom —this is universal liberty. The belles of the Fifth avenue may go to church in fashionable full undress, and show their charms "without remorse or dread;" and belles of the kitchen may show their charms as well, and fire the youthful heart, and no one say them nay. This, too, is liberty undefiled and that fadeth not away. Why, therefore, assail the fundamental principles of our government, and denounce the dictums of a living truth. No, no; we live in an atmosphere of freedom, redolent with the spirit of liberty and just made perfect. When the blood-stained—when the—we repeat, when the blood-stained living truth—made perfect. Ah, when—as we have said, has which we wish to fasten upon your understanding—when the blood-stained shreds of our standard shall float in the bright etherial blue, and the stars of ... shall scintillate in ecstatic haloes of crimson ... the Spotted Tail and Blue Horse of a red-... can walk the streets of the white faces, (whose ... they still carry in their girdle,) without getting ... in the nose; that indeed have we reached the alpha and omega of freedom, and republics are not ungrateful:—

Oh, bitter the day when our freedom's assailed,
And sad when our liberty's threatened—
We'll stand by our guns till the last foe's unveiled,
And with the blood of our martyrs he's wetten'd.

What was Horace Greeley but a friendless boy when he first reached the metropolis of America? Without even a white coat or a white hat to his back he came upon us unheralded, unannounced. He was hungry, and we gave him spoon victuals; he was athirst, and we gave him lager; he was without a lodging in this vast wilderness, and we gave him a cot. He was a type setter and he was equal to any of our regular setters. And here let us pay a compliment to the old sports of New York—when the irrepressible Horace first made his maiden appearance in New York he found it a hard road to travel until that "tall son of York," Wm. T. Porter, of the old Spirit of the Times—the genial and open-hearted sporting editor—took the little wanderer by the hand, led him through pleasant places, and gave him a job to set up sporting news! Let it be proclaimed to all the world, let it be announced from the citadels and sung in coliseums, that but for the late lamented Wm. T. Porter, editor of a sporting paper, the Liberal party would be without a Presidental candidate, Grant might have a "walk over," and the sage of Chappaqua might have had his light hidden under a bushel basket in some one-horse farm out west, unknowing and unknown! But now—lapsus linguæ —BEHOLD THE MAN!!! [Large types for "behold the man," and three exclamation points fastened on to them to fasten public attention.—Ed.] See with what marvelous strides he is marching on, fulfilling his destiny, lending a dollar or two to impecunious highbinders, and chopping trees down to make a clear path to the white house at Washington. Let no prurient prude hereafter decry the sporting world, nor sensuous nabble decision against the boys. So semper tyrannis, and yet the bloodthirsty scions of royalty say republics are ungrateful. But enough of this —we are nearly to the end of our tether. The printers up aloft cry down to us to "cheese it," that six o'clock dinners wait for no man, and so forth. So be it—we will "cheese it," but when the dark clouds that erstwhiles did wrap the earth as in a funeral pall shall be riven by the light of liberty, and the dying groans of Endymion's lost souls shall lift up their stafely heads in a last, last gasp; when the Voiscians and their hollcausts shall stride the dizzy heights of Zenobarba's isle; when the Sciavonic bandits, fresh from the gory fields of Zebulon, shall reach in stern array from Herculaneum's dormant vales to India's hills afar; when the Triumvirate of Ossian's war chariots shall crush beneath the Roman temple's walls all that is perishable of the by-gone age, oh, then shall this fair fabric of freedom's holy form be down in all the glory of America's living destiny, until there shall be one universal 4th of July from the shores of Tartary to where the sun makes his last stand in all his effulgence and beauty!

City Summary.

Frank Lawler, co-manager of Aiken's Theatre, Chicago, Ill., is in town.

Dominick Murray commenced an engagement at Wood's Museum on the evening of June 24th, acting in a sensational drama written by himself and C. W. Barry, entitled "Escaped from Sing Sing," which was presented for the first time on any stage at the matinee performance of that day. At the evening performances and Saturday matinee throughout the week it was acted with the following cast:—

Eph Bloodsworth.	Porky Clark.....A. H. Sheldon
English Bill.....	Jimmy Ross.....A. J. Debonay
Sandy McPherson. Dominick	Charley Dillon.....R. J. Lewis
Mr. Ripsie Thos. Murray	Sedgio Jem.....L. R. Willard
dore Livingstone	Turnkey.....L. Fisher
Dr.	Keepers.....Hatch and Leo
Mr. Vanstone.....C. C. Charles	Laura Livingstone.
Arthur Vanstone..F. L. Connor	Jennie Carroll
Judge Redford.....L. J. Mestayer	Mrs. Vanstone..Mrs. Van Deren
Harry Redford.....T. W. Keene	Alice, her daughter.
Biddy	Jennie Arnot
Otis Belfort.....Harry Stewart	Maggie.....Jennie Satterlee
Doctor Sweigler.....W. Allard	Jennie.....Alice Atherton
Carline.....J. Wallace	Sally.....Annie Page

At the matinee performance it was acted with the same cast save that those characters performed by Dominick Murray were impersonated by C. W. Barry. It is cleverly constructed and its dialogue is terse and pointed. It may be pronounced superior to a majority of the dramas of its class. It depicts scenes which are supposed to have transpired during the career of the notorious convict Bristol Bill, and, during the course of the drama, there are several speeches which animadvert severely upon the manner in which justice is administered in police courts which elicited lavish applause. The scene of its action is in and around New York city and the thread of its plot is as follows:—English Bill causes Laura Livingstone, an adventuress and Bill's supposed sister, to be admitted to the home of Mr. Vanstone, an opulent banker, as a companion to his invalid wife, with this object in view—that Mrs. Vanstone shall be quietly removed, then Miss Livingstone shall ensnare Mr. Vanstone with her fascinations, marry him and then enable English Bill and his gang to possess themselves of his wealth. In the prologue we find Miss Livingstone so established, and as Dr. Sweigler is about visiting his patient, Mrs. Vanstone, he is waylaid by English Bill and his gang, bound and hurried across the river into the suburbs and kept in confinement. English Bill, disguised as a French doctor, calls at the Vanstone mansion and pretends, unannounced, to enter the sick chamber of Mrs. Vanstone, who is much alarmed at his presence. He quickly quiets her fears by stating that Dr. Sweigler, being suddenly called to the bedside of another patient, had requested him, as a brother physician, to call professionally upon her. After a brief examination of the condition of his patient, he assures her she is progressing favorably, and urges her to use freely inhalations from a flacon of which she holds in her hand. Taking it momentarily to test the quality of its contents, he adroitly substitutes another flacon of similar appearance, which contains a subtle poison. He takes his departure, and Mrs. Vanstone resumes her occupation of writing a letter to a dearly beloved absent daughter. As she writes she frequently inhales from the flacon and gradually loses consciousness. Becoming alarmed at her condition, she rises to ring the bell, to summon assistance, and ere she reaches the bell cord, falls lifeless upon the floor. The doctor stealthily re-enters, takes from her hand the flacon containing the poison, and substitutes the one he had previously removed. He extinguishes the gas, and as he is about leaving the apartment he suddenly encounters Harry Redford, who is about entering. They close with each other and a violent struggle ensues, which terminates with Redford being thrown through a window, and as Bill escapes the curtain descends. The balance of the drama is devoted to the pursuit of English Bill by the police, his baffling their efforts to capture him by most ingenious devices, and his visits in various disguises to the Vanstone mansion, to demand money from Laura Livingstone. The latter, instead of being true to the trust committed to her by the gang—that of ensnaring the affections of Mr. Vanstone—she in reality falls in love with Arthur, his son, who indignantly reciprocates her passion. English Bill being apprised of the true state of affairs, visits her, disguised as a Scotch coachman, and during the interview he informs her that she is not his sister, and that after she has married and obtained the money of Mr. Vanstone, he intends to wed her himself. Finding that she is not bound to him by the ties of consanguinity, she defies him and threatens to denounce him rather than give up Arthur. Thereafter we find English Bill an inmate of Sing Sing prison, a revolt takes place among the convicts aided and abetted by their companions on the outside of the prison, and English Bill escapes by plunging into the river, and swimming some distance under water, while over him on the surface of the water floats a decoy duck, which is attached by wires to his head and serves to deceive the guards by apparently accounting for the ripple in the waters. Disguised as an elderly gentleman, Claude Theophius Livingstone, he enters the Vanstone mansion under pretence of communicating to Laura Livingstone her inheritance of a large property. Requesting a private interview the guests retire, and he demands from Laura money and the fulfillment of her promise. She still defies him, and during the stormy interview Arthur Vanstone, Harry Redford and others overhear a portion of the conversation, and Arthur denounces Laura Livingstone as the murderess of his mother, while Harry Redford unmasks English Bill. A brief struggle ensues, when Laura and Bill both seek safety in flight, and both are shot and killed ere they escape from the house. The underplot is comical, and affords an agreeable relief to the sombre portions of the drama. It was fairly acted throughout and gave apparent satisfaction. Mr. Murray was seen in much variotage in the various characters assumed, the make-up for each being a study, while his Yorkshire, French and Scotch dialects we have seldom heard equalled upon the mimic stage. He is a conscientious artist, and accomplishes his effects quietly and artistically. G. C. Charles gave a satisfactory impersonation of Mr. Vanstone, the banker, and the same may be said of Mr. Connor's representation of his son, Arthur. L. J. Mestayer acted Judge Redford, of the Supreme Court, with becoming dignity and ease. T. W. Keene, as Harry Redford, was vigorous and natural, while his assumed character of Biddy, a pop corn vendor, was well conceived and delineated. J. J. Wallace, as the Dutchman, Karl, who figured conspicuously in the underplot, was quaint and humorous and kept the audience in the best of temper. A. H. Sheldon had but little opportunity to display his peculiar talents as Porky Clark, yet what such offered he convulsed the audience with laughter. Harry Stewart, A. J. Debonay, R. J. Lewis, L. R. Willard and L. Fisher evinced care and attention in the minor characters. Mrs. Van Deren acted the brief character of Mrs. Vanstone intelligently. Miss Jennie Carroll deserves much praise for her correct conception and thorough embodiment thereof of the character of Laura Livingstone. She was costumed with excellent taste and during the drama, when she went disguised to visit English Bill, she were male attire, which was very becoming. Maggie, an Irish girl, from the Emerald Isle, was most effectively impersonated by Jenny Satterlee, her brogue being excellent and acting natural. Miss Jennie Arnot as Alice looked charmingly and acted that character ingenuously. Miss Alice Atherton as the colored girl, Jennie, won much favor in her songs and dances and Miss Anna Page delivered, in a natural manner the few lines allotted to the domestic, Sally. During the earlier portion of the week the attendance was excellent, but naturally diminished when the nights were oppressively warm. This evening, July 1st, a new and original sensation drama, written by Bobby Newcomb, entitled "Won Out," will be acted for the first time, and, in it the author, Charles Gibbons, Joseph Cheever and Edward Kennedy, are announced to perform.

G. W. H. Griffin, Unsworth and Eugene, well-known minstrel performers, are in town.

Mrs. Francis A. Height, wife of Bob Height, Ethiopian comedian, performing with the Georgia Minstrels, died June 25th.

T. V. Jones, late agent for Albert Aiken, also for Marias Turck's dramatic companies, has been engaged as treasurer at Tony Pastor's Opera House during the summer dramatic season, under the management of Robert Johnson.

Miss Lydia Thompson, the new members of her company and Alexander Henderson sailed from Liverpool, Eng., June 27th, per City of Brooklyn. They are to appear at Wallack's July 22d, in a new burlesque from the prolific pen of Henry J. Byron.

The following stellar attractions have been secured for the Olympic Theatre:—W. Horace Lingard and company, who commence an engagement on August 19th; Miss Charlotte Thompson, who will produce a new play during the latter part of July; Mlle Almee, with a reorganized opera bouffe company, who will play four weeks, commencing October 14th, and Miss Lucille Western, who will commence an engagement on Nov. 11th.

The season at the Theatre Comique closed with the performances of Saturday evening, June 29th, when "Chicago, Before, During and After the Fire," which had been performed during the week received its last report sensation. A summer term will be inaugurated this evening, July 1st, when a new company, including John Hart, the popular Ethiopian comedian, will appear in an olio performance. The regular variety season will be commenced early in the fall, under the management of Josh Hart.

"On the Jury," which has not achieved marked success, was withdrawn from the stage of Wallack's Theatre, after the performances of June 29th. This evening, July 1st, a new drama, entitled "The Last Trump Card," will receive its initial representation.

W. H. Whalley, a popular and favorite actor with the theatre-goers on the east side of the town, commenced an engagement at the Bowery Theatre, on Monday evening, June 24th, when he acted the chief character in "Macbeth," which was supplemented with the drama entitled the "Pride of the Ocean." On Tuesday evening, the late N. B. Clarke's drama of "Glo, the Armorer of Tyre," and the farce of "Sarah Tibbs," constituted the bill. On Wednesday evening, the popular leading man, William Marden, took his annual benefit, when "Oliver Twist," "Captain Kyd" and "Jack Junk," were performed. On Thursday, George France, low comedian, received a benefit, when the following programme was offered:—"The Veterans," with Mr. Whalley in the chief character; an olio performance, with Harry McCarthy, character vocalist, and Hen. Mason in a musical act, and the drama of "Jack Sheppard," in which C. F. Seabert voluntarily acted Blueskin. Miss Millie Sackett, one of the most popular and pleasing soubrettes that has appeared for years at that theatre, made her appeal to the public on Friday evening, when Lestingwell played Romeo Jaffer Jenkins, in "Too Much for Good Nature," and "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was acted with Miss Sackett as Topsy and Mr. Whalley as George Harris. During the evening General de Lacey recited a ballad. On Saturday evening Mr. Whalley closed his engagement, acting in the "Carpenter of Rouen" and "Nick of the Woods." A matinee performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was given on Saturday. This evening, July 1st, Miss Kate Raymond and Mr. O. B. Collins are to commence an engagement, acting in "Mazeppa," in which their trained horse will likewise take part. We append the following synopsis of the past season's business:—

In the evening, also on the 26th, in "Mazeppa," followed by "Gale Breezely; 27th, in "Eagle Eye," preceded by the "Two Colts," and followed by the "Secret;" 28th, "Putnam" and "Handsome Jack," 29th, the "Three Fast Men;" and "Dick Turpin," and on the 30th the "French Spy" and "Jack Sheppard" were performed.

January 1.—Charles Petrie commenced an engagement, acting in "Pedestin; or, The Reindeer," preceded by "Two Colts," which ran the whole week. Kate Raymond and O. B. Collins commenced an engagement on the 8th, acting in "The Waifs of New York," preceded by the "House Dog" and songs and dances by Little Dolores. The "Winner Bird" were the drama was continued during the following week, preceded the first four evenings thereof by the "Brigands of Calabria," on the 15th by "Jack Sheppard" and the 20th by "Der Freischutz." G. W. Sharpley commenced an engagement on the 22d, acting in "Zip; or, a Life's Devotion," preceded by the "Tiger of the Sea" until Saturday, when "Der Freischutz" was substituted. James M. Ward commenced an engagement on the 29th, acting in "Through by Daylight," preceded by "Husband at Sight" on that and the two following evenings. On the afternoon of February 1. Billy Reeves received a benefit, when a minstrel and variety performance was given. In the evening the "Streets of New York" was performed. On the 3d, "Claude Du Val; or, The Outlaw of '98" and "Black Eyed Susan," and on the 3d, the drama was repeated, in conjunction with the "Irishman's Home." During the week Der Freischutz performed clog dances and Ethiopian specialties. Susan and Kate Denin began an engagement on the 5th, acting in "Will Hatley," preceded by "Antony and Cleopatra," which ran until Friday, when "Forsaken" superseded the drama. At the matinee on the 9th, "East Lynne" was performed, and in the evening Friday's programme was repeated. On the 12th, Master Percy Roselle commenced an engagement, acting in the "Boy Detective," preceded by Out on the Loose," which ran during the week. Susan and Kate Denin acted in "East Lynne" at the matinee on Saturday. J. B. Studley commenced an engagement on the 19th, performing in "Buffalo Bill," which, preceded by "Crossing the Line," ran during the week. It was on the following week, preceded by "Dick Turpin." On the 26th, W. F. Cody—Buffalo Bill—and E. Z. C. Judson, the author of the story, appeared upon the stage between the acts and addressed the audience.

March 4.—"Buffalo Bill" was continued during the week, preceded by "The Blind Miss," and was given at the matinee on the 9th. It was acted during the following week, preceded by "Cato; or, The White Slave's Revenge." On the 18th, E. L. Blanchard appearing in the olio. On the 18th the pantomime of "Don Juan" was substituted for the balance of the week. A matinee was given on the 16th. J. B. Studley closed his engagement with the performance of the 16th in connection with a prior engagement to act at the Grand Opera House. On the 18th W. H. Whalley commenced an engagement, acting the chief character in "Buffalo Bill," which ran during the week, preceded, on the 18th and 19th, by "Jack O'Robinson and His Monkey;" 20th and 21st, by "Cato; or, The White Slave's Revenge;" 22d and 23d, by "Valentine and Orson," in all of which E. L. Blanchard appeared. "Buffalo Bill" was acted five nights of the following week, being withdrawn after the performances of the 29th, and was preceded by "Hunting a Turtle." On the 30th, at the matinee, "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," and in the evening "Three Red Men of Blanthorp" and "The Irishman's Home" were performed.

April 1.—"Out of Fire," preceded by "Sally Smart," were produced and acted during the week. On the 8th, the "Beautiful Shoe Binder of Lynn; or, New York in 1850," was produced, and, preceded by "Anthony and Cleopatra," ran throughout the week. W. H. Whalley commenced an engagement on the 15th, and on the 13th N. B. Clarke, the stage manager, died. The drama preceded by "A. S. S." was acted on the 15th, 16th, 17th, and the matinee on the 20th. On the 18th and 19th, "New York Burglars; or, a Marriage by Moonlight," and the "Jolly Cobblers," and on the 20th, "Brian O'Lynn," "Black Eyed Susan," "Jack Sheppard," and "Jagues Strop" were performed. On the 22d, "A Lost Life" was produced, and ran during that week, having been preceded the first four evenings by the "Spectre Bridegroom;" on the 26th by "The Jewess," and 27th by "Der Freischutz." On the 29th, "Searching the Depths" was revived, and acted five nights and Saturday matinee, preceded by "Solon Shingle."

May 6.—Leo Hudson's "Bagpiece of Fun," and "Doodles" and the "Charcoal Burner" were performed. On the 8th, Lizzie Safford commenced an engagement, acting in "Woodleigh," which preceded by "Man, the Good for Nothing," ran during that week. Albert W. Aiken commenced an engagement on the 13th, producing the "Witches of New York," which ran during the week, preceded the first five evenings by "My Fellow Clerk," and on Saturday by "Dodging the Police." Bobby Daly commenced an engagement on the 20th, acting in the "Female Detective," preceded by "Sarah Tibbs." On the 21st, the "French Spy," "Lollypop Dodger" and the "Floating Beacon." On the 22d, for Charles Foster's benefit, "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," "Jenny Lind" and the "Old Straw Man of New York." On the 23d, for J. P. Winter's benefit, the "Ticket-of-Leave-Man" and "Der Freischutz." On the 24th, for Mrs. W. G. Jones' benefit, "Ireland as It Is," "Out of Fire," Bobby Daly in an act called the "Fatman's Ball," and "Dick, the Newsboy." On the 25th, at the matinee, the "Female Detective" and in the evening "Jack Sheppard." "Stage Struck Lovers" and "Winner Bird" were performed. On the 27th, O. B. Collins, his trained horse, and Clara Warwick commenced an engagement, acting in "California; or, The Heathen Chinee," which ran during the week, preceded by "Brother Bill and Me." Mr. Connolly had been absent from the boards some weeks, in consequence of a broken arm, re-appeared on the 27th.

June 3.—The drama was continued during the week, being preceded by "Parson Jim" on the 4th, by "The Bottle" on the 5th, for the benefit of P. Connolly. On the 4th, the attaches had a benefit, and on the 7th, a benefit was given the widow of the late N. B. Clarke, but no change was made in the bill. On the 10th, the "Seven Sisters" was produced, and ran on the 11th, during that week, preceded by the "Yankee Duelist." It was continued the following week, preceded on the 17th and 18th by "A Separate Maintenance," and on the 19th, for the benefit of John Collins, treasurer of the 3d st. Opera House, in which W. H. Whalley and J. B. Studley voluntarily acted and was followed by the "Pride of the Ocean." On the 20th and 21st Monday's bill was repeated, and on the 22d, the "Lost Son; or, The Banker," and the same may be said of Mr. Connor's representation of his son, Arthur. L. J. Mestayer acted Judge Redford, of the Supreme Court, with becoming dignity and ease. T. W. Keene, as Harry Redford, was vigorous and natural, while his assumed character of Biddy, a pop corn vendor, was well conceived and delineated. J. J. Wallace, as the Dutchman, Karl, who figured conspicuously in the underplot, was quaint and humorous and kept the audience in the best of temper. A. H. Sheldon had but little opportunity to display his peculiar talents as Porky Clark, yet what such offered he convulsed the audience with laughter. Harry Stewart, A. J. Debonay, R. J. Lewis, L. R. Willard and L. Fisher evinced care and attention in the minor characters. Mrs. Van Deren acted the brief character of Mrs. Vanstone intelligently. Miss Jennie Carroll deserves much praise for her correct conception and thorough embodiment thereof of the character of Laura Livingstone. She was costumed with excellent taste and during the drama, when she went disguised to visit English Bill, she were male attire, which was very becoming. Maggie, an Irish girl, from the Emerald Isle, was most effectively impersonated by Jenny Satterlee, her brogue being excellent and acting natural. Miss Jennie Arnot as Alice looked charmingly and acted that character ingenuously. Miss Alice Atherton as the colored girl, Jennie, won much favor in her songs and dances and Miss Anna Page delivered, in a natural manner the few lines allotted to the domestic, Sally. During the earlier portion of the week the attendance was excellent, but naturally diminished when the nights were oppressively warm. This evening, July 1st, a new and original sensation drama, written by Bobby Newcomb, entitled "Won Out," will be acted for the first time, and, in it the author, Charles Gibbons, Joseph Cheever and Edward Kennedy, are announced to perform.

G. W. H. Griffin, Unsworth and Eugene, well-known minstrel performers, are in town.

Mrs. Francis A. Height, wife of Bob Height, Ethiopian comedian, performing with the Georgia Minstrels, died June 25th.

T. V. Jones, late agent for Albert Aiken, also for Marias Turck's dramatic companies, has been engaged as treasurer at Tony Pastor's Opera House during the summer dramatic season, under the management of Robert Johnson.

Miss Lydia Thompson, the new members of her company and Alexander Henderson sailed from Liverpool, Eng., June 27th, per City of Brooklyn. They are to appear at Wallack's July 22d, in a new burlesque from the prolific pen of Henry J. Byron.

The following stellar attractions have been secured for the Olympic Theatre:—W. Horace Lingard and company, who commence an engagement on August 19th; Miss Charlotte Thompson, who will produce a new play during the latter part of July; Mlle Almee, with a reorganized opera bouffe company, who will play four weeks, commencing October 14th, and Miss Lucille Western, who will commence an engagement on Nov. 11th.

The season at the Theatre Comique closed with the performances of Saturday evening, June 29th, when "Chicago, Before, During and After the Fire," which had been performed during the week received its last report sensation. A summer term will be inaugurated this evening, July 1st, when a new company, including John Hart, the popular Ethiopian comedian, will appear in an olio performance. The regular variety season will be commenced early in the fall, under the management of Josh Hart.

"On the Jury," which has not achieved marked success, was withdrawn from the stage of withstanding the extreme hot weather. The company now engaged consists of Oscar Willis, stage manager; the Barlow brothers, ice dancers; Mike Kanane, clog; A. W. Barkely, whose delineation of the modern fireboy is exciting much favorable notice; Joe Conway, Barkley in mocking with unaffected success; Lotta Malcom, in her attractive garden costume; Cassie Lamercoanx, in her bewitching changes, and Mollie Rivers, besides several other lesser lights. Mike Kanane's graceful clog dance is particularly good. Dora Antonio, Miss Emmanetta and Johnny Reeden have accompanied D. K. Russell to the new Alamo Varieties at Wichita Kan. and I hear are doing a good business. The Claire Sisters are the next attraction. So wrote our correspondent on June 26th.

MISS ANNIE ADAMS, serio-comic vocalist, desires us to state that "she has made no engagement whatever to perform in California," although a statement that she was engaged to perform there has been made in some of the papers of San Francisco, Cal.

R. H. MCLEAR, late of the firm of the McLear brothers, who ran a dramatic company, which closed its season on June 16th, on which date the firm was dissolved, and George McLear retired from the profession, has organized a variety company to be known as McLear's Star Aggregation. Among the principal performers are Mrs. Frank O'Harra McLear, as the star; Phillips and White, double clogists, also song and dance men; Johnny Prindel, Irish, Dutch and Yankee comedian, as well as pantomimist and banjo soloist; Mons. Le Vere, contortionist, and others. Prof. H. M. Perry is the leader of the brass band, and Frank McClear agent. The company will visit the following towns:—St. Johnsville, N. Y.; Richfield Springs, Fort Plain, Canajoharie, Fonda, Amsterdam, Gloversville, Ballston Spa, Saratoga, Fort Edwards, Glens Falls, Whitehall, and thence into Vermont, performing in the principal towns.

FRANK H. NORTON advertises a protean farce for sale.

HOWORTH'S COMBINATION performed at St. Mary's, Canada, June 24th; Mitchell, 25th and 26th; Seaforth, 27th and 28th; Clinton, 29th and July 1st; Godserich, 2d and 3d.

THE TWO TURNER BROTHERS, performing with Stalker and Hopkins' Variety Company, at Northampton, Mass., on June 23d, while doing an outside trapeze performance from a high rope, fell to the ground a distance of some forty feet, sustaining severe bruises, but they will be able to resume their profession in a couple of weeks.

THE MEMBERS of Philadelphia Lodge No. 2, P. B. Order of Elks, are requested to send their address to the secretary, W. S. FOX, as per card elsewhere.

CINCINNATI, O., VARIETY NEWS, up to June 28th, is given to the following effect by our correspondent:—"At the Race Street Varieties the warm weather is making business very sluggish. William Carlton and Jenny Gilmer closed last Saturday, and there have been no additions this week. The company is rather slender, embracing Lew Cavana, George Morton, Ash Clayton, James Finley, Minnie Baker, Lon Florence and Sadie Lloyd. The programmes have contained nothing of particular note. Prof. Francois, magician, is engaged to open July 1st.....At the Olympic Theatre the only new comer this week has been Mollie St. Martine, character singer and dancer, who opened June 26th. On the same night Ida Morton and Pauline left abruptly, and without notice, as the proprietor alleges. Prof. Lawrence still continues his revolving statues, assisted by Kate Hunter and Minnie Warner. Johnny Donaldson, M. A. Griffin and Julia Barton are still here, and business is reported fair.....At the Pacific Garden the new appearances have been George Kelly, Dutch and Ethiopian comedian; Harry Wilkinson, Ethiopian comedian and character vocalist, and Eddie Trainor, gymnast and pantomimist, each of whom is very good in his line. Walter Gale, a promising young balladist and character singer, was reengaged this week, but will close to-morrow. The hat spinning, gymnastics, and trapeze performances of Mons. Ventini, Trainor and Mlle Zuleila, contortion act of William Duverney, comic character songs of George White, songs and dances of Master Victor, and change songs of Jenny Wilmore, together with a fresh pantomime, make up the salient features of the programme. Harry Leary closed a somewhat lengthy stay on June 29th.....The Hudley and Midford Minstrels (amateurs), together with George White, Trainor, Duverney and Ventini, gave a day performance at Parlor Grove, Ky., June 27th, on the occasion of a pic-nic.....The Tony Pastor party open at Wood's Theatre, July 1st."

MORTIMER'S PHILADELPHIA VARIETIES company, after giving one performance at the Falls of Schuylkill, Pa., on the 26th of June, concluded to abandon their contemplated traveling season, business not being encouraging.

THE HOWARD ATHENÆUM, Boston, Mass., had, during the past week, Mlle. Geraldine and Mons. Leopold in "Lulu;" Linglook, the Chinese sword swallower; Yamadiva, the man serpent; G. W. Jester, Moe Brothers, and Deliebanty and Hengler. Mlle. Geraldine met with a severe accident on Tuesday, falling from the trapeze to the stage, and injuring herself quite badly. She re-appears on Monday, having, it is said, sufficiently recovered, and a safety net will be spread to prevent future accidents. The Abbott Pantomime Troupe were to open in "The Three Hunchbacks" on Monday evening, July 1st.

IN CHEMUNGVILLE, N. Y., business is very low ebb. Manager Broom has just returned from the east, after having concluded engagements with a number of artists for the fall and winter season at his popular opera house. Manager Billy Buchanan will close his theatre, the Olympic Varieties, next week, for a couple of months, during which time it will be thoroughly renovated and repaired. It is his intention, we understand, to replace the ungainly benches in that establishment with nicely cushioned chairs.

GOOD HOUSES and a well managed programme has been the record at Theatre Comique, Bay City, Mich., during the past week. Miss Viola closes a successful engagement June 29th, and goes to Saginaw City. The other departures the same date are Lew Spencer and M'lle Henrietta, who go to Toledo, O.; Billy Hasson and Laura De Lano, who go to Saginaw City, Mich. Miss Belle Herd appears July 1st; also the Lillian Sisters and Emerson and Granger. With the exception of Miss Herd, the arrivals noted for the present week are all new.

BUSINESS REMAINS GOOD AT THE SAME at the Academy of Music, Richmond, Va. There has been no new additions to the company the past week. Miss Letha Herman, banjo-player, and W. F. Deverdie, contortionist, are announced for July 1st. Miss Jennie Jerome, vocalist, will close her engagement July 3d. Miss Helen Revere, Mlle. Leoline, and Messrs. Bowman, Harris and Tim Morris remain as popular as ever. So wrote our correspondent on July 29th.

THE WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Kansas City, Mo., the only place of amusement open there of any pretensions, was leased to Prof. T. Williams, leader of the orchestra, Friday, 22d, on the occasion of his benefit. The Claire Sisters appeared on June 24th, to a fair audience. No new features are booked for this theatre.

NAT MCCOOL'S VARIETY SHOW, which is performing under canvas, will exhibit at Sharpville, Ind., July 4th; Tilton, 5th, and Noblesville, 6th.

JOHNNY GAVER was the only new appearance at the Varieties Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., on June 24th. His "Essence" I have never seen surpassed. The Sensation Female Minstrels continue to open the entertainment, and this feature is as popular now as when first introduced, three weeks ago. The rest of the programme consisted of a medley dance, by Miss Kate Wilson; Middy Ashore dance, by Frank Christie; Closet Scene of "Hamlet," by J. S. Edwards and Jennie E. Carlton; Dutch song and dance, by John F. Fisher; Album of Songs, Little Josie; Mississippi Fling, Frank Carlton; "True Blue," a negro divertisement, by Kate Wilson, Hotaie Howard, Clara Bogart, Mary Bogart, Emma Ellinger and Annie Jackson; vocal portfolio, Lon Edwards; Scotch dance, Frank Christie, and the performance concluding with the humorous afterpiece of "A New Way of administering Justice," in which nearly the entire company was cast. On the 27th another change of programme was inaugurated, the principal attraction in the new bill being the production of John F. Poole's sensation drama of "The Working Girls of Pittsburgh," with J. S. Edwards as Bill Mayley. So wrote our correspondent on June 28th.

"THE COMIQUE, Peoria, Ill.," the past week has been doing a good business, several old faces having been retrigged, and two new people made their bow, Miss Ella Warner, banjo soloist, and Robert Frayne, juggler, all of whom have been well received. Miss Ella Warner, also, made her first appearance on June 26th. She has considerable ability. Charley Edwards, song and dance artist, made his first appearances on June 24th, and is a very clever performer, lacking, we think, a little precision in time and style. The following new people have been engaged, and will appear July 11th:—Miss Anna Williams, serio-comic vocalist; Little Dot, song and dance, and Miss Lena Dare, trapeze. The Misses Mary Thompson takes place on the 11th, at Rouse's Hall. Mr. S. is slowly recovering from his recent injuries." So wrote our correspondent on June 28th.

AT THE WASHINGTON VARIETIES, Providence, R. I., Maggie Gray and Billy Chase were the new attractions on June 24th. Business has been excellent in spite of the hot weather. Adele Farrar and Prof. Hughes are announced for July 1st, and Jennie and Maggie Beason for the 8th.....Stalker and Hopkins' Combination disbanded on June 26th, the company having been much weakened by the accident to the Lester Brothers, referred to elsewhere, as well as by Harry Miller's accident, previously reported. Miller is gaining fast, and went out for the first time on the 29th. So wrote our correspondent on June 30th.

THE FOLLOWING NEW FACES have appeared at the Varieties Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., during the past week. M'lle Leonetti, Fanny Fordham, Messrs. Billy Barry and Add. Ringler. A grand complimentary benefit will be tendered the manager, Mr. James McGirr, on Tuesday evening, July 2d, and a set of silver torches will be given the city fire company selling the largest number of tickets.

MR. CLARENCE LESTER advertises for his vocalists and gymnasts for the Old Fell Varieties, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

AT THE BROOKLYN, L. I., OPERA HOUSE, Professor Sylvester and Miss Angelique Schott performed during the week ending June 29th, Prof. Jester, the inimitable ventriloquist, also adding to the attractions of the performances. The business was only fair, owing to the excessive heat. The feature of the bill presented was the illusion of sleeping in the air by Miss Schott, and the "Talking Hand" by Jester, the latter being among the best ventriloquial acts ever given in this country. This week the Sappho troupe join forces with Professor Sylvester.

HENRY BLOODGOOD and his minstrel and burlesque combination made their first appearance in Auburn, N. Y., on June 26th, at the Academy of Music, playing to a good audience. Harry is a favorite there, and his act, "He's Got to Come," is full of mirth. The company includes Pedanto, the man fly; Gus Williams, the Dutch vocalist; Tommy and Willie Daly, clogists; Andy J. Leavitt, banjoist; the Freeman Sisters, and a company which gives an excellent entertainment. They have a fine orchestra and a good brass band. They perform in Buffalo, N. Y., July 1st.

SEELEY'S COMPANY, being the only permanent place of amusement now open at Buffalo, N. Y., does an excellent business. The arrivals on June 24th were Mr. Leon Whetiony, Prof. Fox and Lew Myers. The farce of "Driven from Home" opened the bill, followed by Chas. Wesley in a song and dance, and the Harrisons in a double medley dance. Burton and Rainforth executed a Zouave drill; the negro act of "The Stranger," by Quinn and Reece, proved an immense card; J. F. Hill, in gymnastic feats, established a reputation as a first-class artist; Prof. Fox gave a clever imitation of birds and fowls; Lew Myers, in his musical act, gave satisfaction, and the performance concluded with M. Leon Whetiony's burlesque of "Masonry Exposed," the richest thing of the kind ever produced in this city, in which each actor sustained his part with credit. It is to be repeated next (this) week. No changes at present, with the exception of J. F. Hill, who closes to-night and opens at the Rochester Opera House on July 1st. On July 4th Manager Shelby announces three performances—morning, afternoon and evening. So wrote our correspondent, "Typo," on June 29th.

THE DYSENTERY WHAT considerably thinned the attendance at the variety halls in Baltimore, Md., the past week. At the Opera House Charley Fox, Dutch song and dance artist, opened last Monday, and made a big hit. His dancing is the best of the kind we have ever witnessed. The other fresh appearance was Miss Josie Richardson, dancer and statue performer. Den Howe closed yesterday, going to Washington, D. C. No additions are announced for next week.....At Ranker's Odeon Varieties a good bill was presented the past week, the principal performers being the Misses Lulu Delmar, Mazey Rodney, Mollie Wilson, Maggie Bowers, Maggie Mortimer, and Messrs. Sam Orne, Frank Bell, Dan Howard and Bill Smith. So wrote our correspondent on June 28th.

TALENT is wanted for the Atlantic Garden, Wilkesbarre, Pa. See advertisement.

E. D. DAVIES, ventriloquist, and Sargent, Illusionist, are engaged during the present week at the National Theatre, Washington, D. C. For further announcements see their card in another column.

THE METROPOLITAN HALL, in Washington, D. C., was, on the night of Saturday, June 29th, the scene of one of those terrible catastrophes which occasionally happens, and invariably throws a gloom over the dramatic profession, proving how true it is that "in the midst of life we are in death." It appears that on the evening in question, the time-worn negro act, entitled "Obeying Orders," was on the bills, and Johnny Keegan, Charley Brown and Jas. Porter were performing in it. The first named took the part of Hannah Gun, Brown that of Corporal Trigger, and Porter that of Colonel Bullet. Hannah was at the wash-tub, Trigger was on duty, holding a musket, and the Colonel was seated at a table writing a letter. As he wrote he read aloud, and as military terms were used, such as attention, ready, etc. Trigger handled his gun accordingly, and when the word "fire" was given, the business of the piece demanded that he should shoot at the Colonel and the curtain should then fall. Instead of this being carried out properly, however, at the word present, Brown accidentally discharged the gun (a Springfield rifle) which exploded within a few inches of Keegan's head, and inflicted a most fearful wound. The curtain immediately dropped, and although it was evident to the audience that an accident of some description had happened, they had no idea how serious it was, as the performance went on without any delay. Miss Agnes Robinson entered the stage on one side, as the wounded man was carried off on the other, and executed her song and dance, while his warm blood was soaking into her satin boots. It was probably owing to her coolness and presence of mind that a scene of confusion was avoided. Keegan was lifted into the wine room, and a surgeon summoned, who pronounced the wound most likely to prove fatal. As soon as the audience dispersed he was taken to the Providence hospital, and at noon on Sunday he was still unconscious. It is known that he has a mother living, but up to the present time all efforts to discover her whereabouts have proved unsuccessful. Johnny Keegan is an Irish and Ethiopian song and dance and end man, and in his line of business is extremely clever. He is twenty-three years of age, and a general favorite among his brother professionals. Dora Dawron joined the company on June 24th, and Masori Arnoldi also re-appeared, after an absence of several weeks. Miss Dawron, in her double vocalism, created quite a sensation and proved an attractive card for the management. In the minstrel scene she sang "Over the River My Darling," with pleasing effect, and in the olio, one half of her body made up as a female, sang a duet, with the other half of her body made up as a male, in two entirely distinct voices. The remainder of the company included Josephine Walby and Masori Arnoldi, danseuse, Agnes Robertson, vocalist, William Deverdie, contortionist, and Chas. Brown and Johnny Keegan, Ethiopian comedians. So wrote our correspondent on June 30th.

THE DETROIT, MICH., THEATRE COMIQUE forces were augmented by four new people June 24th. Mollie Sommers gave both Dutch and English comic songs very acceptably, which could be improved by speaking the words more distinctly. Elise Scott, danseuse, was very good, much better than the average, exhibiting gracefulness and skill. Johnny Smith was called out four times in his banjo solo. Dick Gorman, in his Dutch songs, was not a success, but in his wooden shoe dance was immense; for correct time and rapidity we have never seen his equal. Charley Walters, having proved such an attractive card, has been engaged here for the season. The Foy Sisters are more popular than ever. Tommy Winnette, on the eve of his departure, the 26th, was presented with a gold medal by his Detroit friends. It was a very handsome token of their esteem, and was suitably inscribed. Quilter and Goldrich close June 29th, and the Lopez family, Millie Lizette and Geo. Thatcher, open July 1st. So wrote our correspondent on June 28th.

THE ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Chicago, Ill., is running along to poor attendance. All. Miles and Victoria Rose suddenly seceded from the company on the 26th. No departures this week, nor no new faces in the coming week.

FRANK ALLEN, Dutch comedian, who can be addressed care of this office, wants an engagement.

G. W. JESTER is at present performing at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., where he can be addressed.

PETE LEE, HOGAN AND MUDGE, song and dance; J. H. Jeffrey, the man serpent; J. D. Rooma, banjo soloist; Jerry Cohen, Irish comedian, and Miss Blanche Selwyn, character vocalist, were the principal attractions at Bishop's Opera House, St. John, N. B., during the past week.

Negro Minstrelsy.

UNCLE SAM'S BOYS.—The following programme was recently performed by a troupe on board U. S. ship Brooklyn, at present stationed in European waters:—

"BROOKLYN'S" VARIETY TROUPE.—Stop and read about the sad calamity that will take place on Thursday, May 16th, 1872. Manager, James M. Davis; treasurer, Jas. McCarty; stage architect, James Dean.

SAM SANFORD'S MINSTRELS are billed to perform at Danville, Pa., July 4th.

MORAN AND DIXEY'S MINSTRELS returned to Philadelphia on the 23d of June, after a traveling season of four weeks. They will open the Eleventh Street Opera House, with a new company, on the 22d of August, which company augmented and strengthened in every department.

MANNING'S MINSTRELS closed a week at Pike's Opera House, Cincinnati, O., on June 22d, and commenced a second week at Wood's Theatre, in the same city, on the 24th. Our correspondent writes:—"They have, for their second week, had a repetition of the large audiences previously accorded them. Joe Rainer started for his home in Lockport, N. Y., on Tuesday, but expects to return Saturday. His place as interlocutor has been supplied by J. B. Carter, to the best of his ability. E. M. Hall and Manning have had the ends this week, Newcomb only appearing once in a farce. The ballads of J. J. Kelly, Genave Bidaux and Harry Percy have been about the best relished portions of the programme, as some of the comedians have not seemed to exert themselves greatly to please. To-night is announced a benefit for Andy McKee and Stevie Rogers, who are prime favorites, and deservedly. A burlesque, the 'Somnambulist,' has been the main feature of the bills. The troupe wind up their stay here June 29th, playing in Lexington, Ky., July 1st and 2d; Frankfort 3d, and Louisville the balance of the week.....Billy Emerson's party opens at Pike's Opera House, Monday, 15th."

HARRY ROBINSON is spending a short vacation in Syracuse, N. Y. He has nearly completed a new minstrel organization, of which he will be manager, and Harry Kernell will be a member. They open first in Troy.

CAL WAGNER'S MINSTRELS gave two entertainments at Harrington's Opera House, Providence, R. I., June 28th and 29th.

DUPREE & BENEDICK'S MINSTRELS open at the Pittsburgh, Pa., Opera House, on July 1st, for one week.

HOOLEY'S MINSTRELS closed up in Brooklyn, L. I., for the season on June 29th, and departed on a tour. Archie Hughes had a benefit on the 28th, and Luke Schoolcraft on the 26th.

LEW JOHNSON'S PLANTATION MINSTRELS commenced a brief season at Trenton N., June 26th, Johnny Morton, song and dance, also Ewing and Scott, double clog dancers, are with this troupe.

CAL WAGNER'S MINSTRELS are to perform at Manchester, N. H., July 3d, and Worcester, Mass., 4th.

SKIFF & GAYLORD'S MINSTRELS appeared at Washington, D. C., June 25th and 26th, and at the Holiday Street Theatre, Baltimore, Md., 27th, 28th and 29th, to moderate audiences.

SAM SHARPLEY'S MINSTRELS open at Ford's Grand Opera House, Baltimore, Md., on July 1st, for one week.

EMERSON'S CALIFORNIA MINSTRELS opened at the Globe Theatre, Chicago, Ill., on June 25th, and will remain the balance of the week. Notwithstanding the hot weather, they are attracting excellent houses. The company is very large. The programme is replete with novelties and well calculated to please. They open in St. Louis, July 1st.....Arlington, Cotton & Kemble's Minstrels are presenting a really excellent bill of fare this week, which is highly appreciated by the select audiences. It is rumored that this troupe will soon start on a traveling tour. So wrote our correspondent on June 28th.

Circuses.

STOKE AND MURRAY'S CIRCUS was still in the British provinces during the past week. They report experiencing a continuance of rain and mud through Maine and meeting their waggons at Houlton, Me., they left their waggons at Calais, Me., and traveled by boat and rail. Hotel charges are said to have been much increased, and the cost of transportation by rail was very high. They performed at Truro, N. S., June 28th; Windsor, 27th; Bridgetown, 28th; St. John, N. B., second visit, 29th, and are billed ahead as follows:—Fredericton, July 1st (Dominion day); Woodstock, 2d; Houlton, Me., 3d; Calais, 4th, where three performances will be given, and they will again take to the road and travel by wagons.

PROF. PHIL. BLUMENTHAL, leader of the band with Jas. E. Cooper's circus, was recently presented by his friends in that company, at Springfield, Ill., with an amethyst ring and shirt studs set with diamonds.

JAMES E. COOPER'S CIRCUS performed at Quincy, Ill., June 24th, and Hannibal, Mo., 25th, and thence through that state.

JAMES E. WARNER'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE is billed to perform at Frankfort, Ind., July 1st; Lebanon, 2d; Zionsville, 3d, and Indianapolis, 4th.

FOREPAUGH'S GREAT SHOW is announced to exhibit at Milwaukee, Wis., July 9th and 10th.

W. F. AYNAR publishes in another column a card of thanks to the Masonic fraternity of Salisbury, Pa., for the kindness shown by them to him and his family during the sickness, death and burial of his child.

J. E. WARNER & CO.'S MENAGERIE AND CIRCUS exhibited at Ladoga, Ind., June 28th; Crawfordsville, 29th, and is billed ahead as follows:—Frankfort, July 1st; Zionsville, 2d; Lebanon, 3d, and Indianapolis, 4th.

C. G. GRADY'S MENAGERIE AND CIRCUS is to exhibit at Michigan City, Ind., July 3d and 4th. On the 5th, three exhibitions will be given and two balloon ascensions made by Prof. Yager.

HOWE'S LONDON CIRCUS AND SANGER'S ENGLISH MENAGERIE are billed in fine style for July 12th and 13th at Portland, Me.

OLD JOHN ROBINSON'S combination circus exhibited in Brooklyn, L. I., during the week ending June 29th, the tents being pitched in Fulton avenue for the first four days and in the eastern district the last two. The weather was against good business the early part of the week, heavy rains combining to check the flow of stamps into the treasury. On Wednesday and Thursday, however, the business was enormous, the tents being crowded afternoon and evening, some four thousand people being inside on Wednesday night. The lack of space prevented the erection of all the tents, consequently only the circus and menagerie tents were up. The show of animals was the best seen in the city for a long while. The feature of the menagerie was the great Sea Lion from Alaska and three eyed cow. The circus performances were managed by the riding displays of Frank Robinson, the noted pad rider; Bob Stickney, the unrivaled somersault equestrian, who turns a double somersault over thirteen horses; Jack Wilson, the famous four horse rider; the colored boy, Lewis, who excels in hurdle riding, and the lady equestrian, not forgetting the excellent clown John Lowlow, and the gilttotes and acrobats of the troupe.

NIXON'S AMPHITHEATRE, Chicago, Ill., can be rented from July 8th to August 26th by any first-class entertainment. It has a portable stage, with dressing-rooms, a forty-foot ring and seating capacity for 3,000 persons. For particulars address J. M. Nixon, as per advertisement.

ROBINSON & CO'S COMBINED CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE are heavily billed to give three shows at Fort Wayne, Ind., on July 4th. Our correspondent says:—"Who they are or where from deponent knoweth not. Their bills are the finest ever displayed here. Burr, Robbins & Co. are proprietors; W. H. Stowe, equestrian manager; Dr. A. Thompson, treasurer; Wm. H. Buckley, master of horses, and Prof. Ginker, leader of band."

JAMES ROBINSON'S CIRCUS performed at Louisville, Ky., June 24th and 25th, but met with only moderate success. The company is undoubtedly a good one, and the individual members, with the exception of the clown, are deserving of praise, while collectively the performance is equal to any we have seen. They open in Frankfort, Ky., 26th; Lexington, Ky., 27th; Cynthiana, Ky., 28th; Covington, Ky., 29th; Cincinnati, O., July 1st, for one week; Connersville, Ind., July 8th, and Bluffton, Ind., July 9th.....The Crescent City Circus opened June 27th, and the canvas was crowded. The extensive experience of Mr. C. W. Noyes has enabled him to perfect one of the best and most satisfactory shows traveling. The company remains this week, performing afternoon and evening. Route ahead:—Madison, Ind., July 1st; Beaver, Ind., 2d; Warsaw, Ind., 3d; Aurora, Ind., 4th. So wrote our correspondent on June 27th.

KELLY & LEON publish, in another column, their repertoire, and state that they can be engaged from Aug. 10th.

M. B. LEAVITT'S MINSTRELS are announced to perform at Fox and Dix Islands, Me., July 1st and 2d, and Bucksrappa, 3d. Ned Straight joined the company, as leader of orchestra, on June 27th.

SELLS BROTHERS' CIRCUS performed at Watakoneta, O., June 27th; St. Mary's 28th; Celina, 29th, and is billed ahead as follows: Shanesville, July 1st; Van Wert, 2d; Decatur, Ind., 3d; Bluffton, 4th; Warren, 5th; Huntington, 6th; North Manchester, 8th; Wabash, 9th; Peru, 10th; Lincoln, 11th; Rochester, 12th; Pleasant Grove, 13th, and Winnemac, 14th. Business is reported good, and a great drought prevailing in that region.

LENT'S NEW YORK CIRCUS is billed to perform at Minneapolis, Minn., July 6th.

NIXON'S CIRCUS continues to do a lucrative business, while the entertainments are as pleasing as usual. Ling Look and his brother Yamadiva closed on June 22d and have gone to Boston, Mass. The Japanese troupe returned and opened on the 24th, and are taking finely in their several acts of juggling, acrobatic feats of magic, rope sliding, etc. M'lle Tournour and Wooda Cooke, after obtaining $30 from this institution and $70 from S. Z. Stokes, who is soon to start out with a circus company, in advance, concluded to jump their engagement and join Nixon and Stokes' Circus, thus leaving Jas. Nixon and Stokes in the lurch. Prof. Chapman's trained ponies are the prominent features, aside from the Japs. Maguire, the clown, as well as Wm. Worrell, are taking well. "Cinderella" is still on the boards and is beautifully done. So wrote our correspondent on June 28th.

JAMES ROBINSON'S CIRCUS is announced to perform the present week at Cincinnati, O., where Billy Burke, the clown, who has been sick during the past two weeks, is expected to re-join the show.

DURING THE PERFORMANCE of the Great Eastern Circus at Watertown, Iowa., on June 26th, a terrible hurricane, accompanied with rain, swept over the city, and blew down their tents, many persons being injured by falling poles, while all were drenched by the rain.

JOHN O'BRIEN'S Four shows are billed to perform at St. Albans, Vt., July 6th, and will open in Montreal, P. E., July 8th for four days, and will start thence to Cornwall, Ont., and will take in all the principal towns in that province.

Miscellaneous.

MASONIC HALL, Lebanon, Tenn., is advertised to rent. It will seat six hundred persons and is furnished with scenery.

A YOUNG MAN, who can give security, advertises for a situation as treasurer with a first class company.

DORIS AND BATCHELLER advertise for a side show blower.

CADY'S NEW HALL, Chatham Village, N. Y., which will seat seven hundred persons, can be rented through the proprietor, whose card find elsewhere.

W. F. BACON advertises banjos, song and dance shoes and suits for sale.

WEISIGER HALL, Louisville, Ky., can be rented through Jno. M. Boggs, who advertises. It has a large stage, with traps, &c.

H. A. B. WILLIAMS, who has just closed a season of twenty-four weeks with Leavitt's Bell Ringers, as agent, joined Robinson's circus and menagerie, as the general agent, at Huntingdon, Pa., during the past week.

WASHBURN'S LAST SENSATION is advertised to be at Pottsville, Pa., June 29th and July 1st.

AT THE ELEVENTH STREET OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, E. D. Davies, the ventriloquist, and J. H. Sargent, magician, completed the third and last week of their season on the 29th June. Mr. E. D. Davies is one of the best ventriloquists that has ever appeared in Philadelphia, and his acts are very entertaining, while J. H. Sargent displayed acceptably his skill as a magician. On the 28th, the occasion of the complimentary benefit to Mr. E. D. Davies, a well-filled house rewarded his efforts to please.

THE ZANFRETTA TROUPE continue to give their open-air performances at Smith's Island, opposite Philadelphia.

BRYANT'S MINSTRELS performed to a $800 house on June 28th, at Peoria, Ill., and the entertainment was one of the best ever given in our city. Mr. Dan Bryant was greeted with loud applause in almost everything in the first part, as was also his opponent on the bone end, Dave Reed. McAndrews, as the Watermelon Man, and as Uncle Eph, an exquisite sketch of plantation life, shows the man to be an actor of no mean ability. Dan in his "Up in a Balloon," is immense. The singing is the best we have ever heard connected with a minstrel party, and was loudly encored. The party open in Chicago the 1st of July for one week, thence eastward. So wrote our correspondent on June 29th.

FRANCOIS, the "Magic Prince," is announced to commence a season at Cincinnati, O., July 1st; Scranton, Pa., 8th; Richmond, Va., 22d, and East Saginaw, Aug. 5th.

ALF BURNETT, the well known humorist, announces that the next will be his last season before the public, and advertises that he can be secured by responsible managers for a first class entertainment.

THE BROOKLYN OPERA HOUSE, Brooklyn, L. I., can be had on sharing terms, or the proprietor will let it for a low rent. See his card elsewhere.

ACHILLE S. PHILION, trapeze performer, juggler, &c., who can be addressed care of this office, wants an engagement.

P. MOONEY & Co. advertise anaconda snakes and a Malay tapir for sale.

THE DAVENPORT BROTHERS performed at Leavenworth, Kansas, June 24th.

WASHBURN'S LAST SENSATION appears at Selling's Grove, Pa., July 8th; Lewisburg, 9th; Watsontown, 10th; Milton, 11th, and Danville, 12th and 13th.

AT A MEETING of the B. P. O. of Elks, was held in Chicago, Ill., Sunday evening, June 23d, at the Biem's House. J. E. Jackson, of Philadelphia, Pa., was called to the chair, and Mr. Dunand, of the Teddo Japanese Troupe, was appointed secretary. Among those present were Bros. Sheridan, Jackson, Dunand, Welch, Mack, Boyd and Mitchell. Among the invited guests were Billy Emerson, Ainsley Scott, Jerry Thompson, S. Q. Stokes, S. S. Sanford, W. Holt, Mr. Holdsworth, Mr. Willis, Mr. Skelton, John Lang, Alex. Kidd, William Worrell, James Maguire, George Wambold, "Chub" Campbell, E. Butler, A. Burt, J. Butler, E. Leibeveit, A. Bent, John Harvey, Dick Willis, Chas. Seaman, S. B. Fisk, Wm. Naylor, W. Cook, Ben Dewitt, Chas. Sands, A. W. Hall, James Duncan, W. Conklin, Harry Norman, Wm. Blenis, Harry Wambold, Harry Linden, and four Japanese performers from Nixon's Circus. During the evening the quartet of Emerson's California Minstrels furnished some excellent music.

A NEW MUSIC HALL has been re-constructed out of the Baptist Church, corner of Griswold and Fort streets, Detroit, Mich., which is centrally located, and fitted up for lectures and concerts at present, with the intention of building a dime theatre, with all the modern improvements. The stage is narrow but long; has foot-lights, but no scenery. Should it prove a success, the above intention will be realized, as we have long wanted a smaller theatre than the Opera House, and this is one of the best sites in the city. Managers of concerts and lectures give it a trial, and help to get what has long been needed, a cozy theatre.

FARLING & CO'S. ARCTIC PANORAMA exhibit three nights at Detroit, Mich., Opera House, commencing June 29th.

E. D. DAVIES, ventriloquist, and H. J. Sargent, prestidigitateur, are announced to perform at the National Theatre, Washington, D. C., during the week commencing July 1st.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

THE SEASON AT THE LONDON, ENG., THEATRES may be considered at its height when ASCOT week is reached. Our foreign files bear date of June 15th. At the Haymarket the old comedietta, "Married Life," had been revived, and for several evening performances..... At the Adelphi a new extravaganza by C. Cheltnam, is in preparation..... At the Lyceum a new farcical sketch by Mr. Reality, entitled "Blood This Must Be Eye," has been produced, "Leah," for it is as follows:—A certain Mr. Leah Lin Leader, whose misanthropic fate it is to keep a chandler's shop in the Goswell road, sees in the Times an advertisement addressed to "Leah," informing her that greatly to his advantage if he will keep an appointment at Overgrass at a particular hour. Either Mr. L. L., or Lambkin Leader, goes in the full appearance that great things are in store for him. But another L. L. Mr. Lionel Long, is on the same errand, and both being in love with the fair sign between him and his lady love, who has promised to run away from her guardian and marry the adorable Lionel Long. The amusement and bewilderment of Lambkin Leader, who gets hopelessly involved up all sorts of difficulties, being always the wrong man in the right place, and so far does fate pursue him that, being Cockney fast day, he is mistaken for a barber and dashed in a horse pond. Mr. Septimus Blandini also comes with Sheriffs' officers to arrest Lionel Long, and the unhappy Lambkin Leader is taken. Meanwhile the happy couple talk to the books of matrimony, defy the guardian Blandini, and all ends happily, having caused no little merriment to the audience during the progress of these complications..... At the Princess' Mr. Fechter is acting Hamlet..... At the Olympic Mr. Reardon and her company were to have closed June 22d.....At the Queen's "Ordeal by Touch" was to have been withdrawn on June 21st, and Mrs. Scott-Siddons was to appear in "Romeo and Juliet," on the 22d, in an entirely new and original domestic drama, by John C. Freund, entitled the "Undergraduate," was announced..... At the Gaiety, Mr. and Mrs. Rousleault were announced to appear in a charity concert in Wigan Hall..... A new drama by Rousleault, entitled "Daddy O'Dowd,".....At the Vaudeville, J. C. Nicholson, musical director, was to have taken a benefit on June 19th, when an original operetta in one act entitled "Love Birds," with the libretto by the beneficiary, and the music by Conway Edwardes, was to have been the chief attraction..... J. L. Toole and the Gaiety comedy company were announced to commence a twelve nights' engagement at Dublin on the 17th.....No other changes. On an outside page will be found the plot of "Bad Sir Giles and Sidonia," produced at the Royalty, June 8th.

MISS MARMONT and her company were announced to play six nights at Sunderland, commencing June 17th.

MISS OSMAY NELSON and her burlesque company were to commence a six nights' season at Scarborough, Eng., June 17th.

M. DE CERNY, director of the Odeon, in Paris, while attending a banquet given by Victor Hugo to the artists of the Odeon on the occasion of the hundredth representation of "Ruy Blas," was struck with apoplexy and died on the night of June 26th. He was born in 1800, and made his début in 1820, at the Odeon, in concert parts in comedy.

THE ARTISTS performing in "Le Roi Carotte," at the Alhambra Theatre, London, Eng., have foreign names, with the exception of Miss Fanny D'Auka, who is an Englishwoman. Miss Cissy is "Le Jeune" in the anagram of Miss Isaacs; Mr. Cecil is Mr. Frank Cecilian.

EDWARD FARRELL was to play "Eileen Oge" at Dundee, Scotland, June 17th to 20th; Glasgow, July 1st to 6th; Manchester, Eng., Aug. 12th to 24th, and Sheffield, Sept. 9th to 21st.

MISS MARY FREY has been engaged by Dion Boucicault for his season at Covent Garden Theatre, London, Eng., next fall.

MR. AND MRS. ALFRED WILDE are announced to take their farewell of the stage at Drury Lane Theatre, London, Eng., on July 6th, at a morning performance, which will be under the patronage of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

MISS AMY SHERIDAN, at the termination of her engagement at the Strand, London, Eng., which will be about the close of the present year, is to leave for America to join the Lydia Thompson burlesque troupe.

"RADAMA," Barkley's play, was presented at Bordeaux, France, on June 26th, on a cable telegram

MR. & MRS. F. S. CHANFRAU.
The engagements for the second starring season of the latter beautiful and brilliant young artiste already extend beyond the holidays. First class managers desiring time subsequent to Jan. 1st, are respectfully invited to address the undersigned.
MRS. CHANFRAU'S previous season is believed to have exceeded in general prosperity that of any lady star, with two exceptions; its artistic results very fully confirmed her honorable New York, Boston and New Orleans distinction, as one of the most gifted and accomplished actresses now gracing the stage.
Her repertoire will include a new society comedy, a strong emotional play, from the French, and, probably, other attractive novelties, together with her specialties of last season, "CHRISTIE JOHNSTONE" AND "EXPIATION."
To the latter powerful play an additional act of intense interest has been added.
First class managers desiring dates for MR. F. S. CHANFRAU are also requested to communicate with the undersigned. Two entirely new American dramas, based upon stirring phases of New York life, and very powerful in emotional and dramatic effects, have been added to his repertoire.

CARD OF THANKS.
The undersigned takes this occasion to return his sincere, grateful and heartfelt thanks to the Masonic Fraternity of Saltsburg, Indiana county, Pa., and to the REV. MR. KETTING,
for the kindness, charity and consideration which were shown my family during the recent sickness, death and burial of my child, Edwin. In a day when the broader charities of life are to a great extent ignored or forgotten, it gives me especial pleasure to bear witness to the humanity and generosity, which, without fee or reward, were showered on me—a stranger in a strange region—and while the recollection of such kindness will ever be treasured in my "heart of hearts" among the pleasantest memories of the past, I trust that their noble deeds may not go unrewarded by Him who rewards "even a cup of cold water given in His name." MRS. F. S. CHANFRAU.
SEASON OF 1872-3.
The engagements for the second starring season of this beautiful and brilliant young artiste, already extend beyond the holidays. First class managers, desiring time, subsequent to Jan. 1st, 1873, are respectfully invited to address the undersigned.
MRS. CHANFRAU'S previous season is believed to have exceeded in general prosperity that of any lady star, with two exceptions; its artistic results very fully confirmed her honorable New York, Boston and New Orleans distinction, as one of the most gifted and accomplished actresses now gracing the stage.
Her repertory will include a new society comedy, a strong emotional play, from the French, and probably other attractive novelties, together with her specialties of last season, "Christie Johnstone" and "Expiation." To the latter powerful play an additional act of intense interest has been added.
First class managers desiring dates for MR. F. S. CHANFRAU, are also requested to communicate with the undersigned.
